Garbage Disposal Presents Problem

Garbage . . . What do we do with it? The answer to that question seems deceptively simple at first consideration. We put it in a black plastic bag and set it back in the alley. If someone's dog or cat doesn't get to it first, the garbage man picks it up, puts it in his truck, drives away, and we never see it again. It's that simple. . . or is it?

For most of us, that's about as complicated as it gets. But easy solutions are seldom as simple as they appear on the surface. The deeper one looks at the problem of garbage disposal, the more complicated it gets.

That's right. Garbage is a problem. Approximately 200 tons of garbage is collected from Thief River Falls and the surrounding area every week. That garbage is hauled 34 miles to the southeast, where it is buried in a sanitary landfill at Gentilly, in Polk county. Most households in the city limits are charged $5.75 per month for that service, with a reduced $3 fee for senior citizens and low income households.

With garbage pickup twice a week in most cases, that rate is considered a bargain by Ken Murphy, chairman of the sanitation committee for the Thief River Falls city council. He notes, however, that the cost of that service is almost certain to increase in the near future, due to causes over which the city of Thief River Falls has practically no control.

Just when and how much it will increase is dependent on a wide number of variables. "One thing is certain," says Murphy. "We've got to be aware of what options are available to us so that we don't allow ourselves to get backed into a corner over this thing sometime in the future. It's going to require some very careful consideration.

Among the options which the city is presently considering (others may present themselves in the future), one of the most obvious is to do nothing, and just continue dumping at the Gentilly site. The city presently pays Polk county $2.75 per yard for the privilege of using that landfill. Bob Jablinske, city sanitation commissioner, notes that even though the total tonnage hauled is more than in previous years, the city is paying less, due to the fact that new trucks being used have a compaction rate over 100 per cent higher than the old trucks. If Polk county goes to charging by the ton, which most landfills do, the city can expect to pay more than twice as much.

As it is, users of the Gentilly site can probably expect a dumping fee increase anyway, since Polk county claims that they are losing money on the operation at a rate of $20,000 per year. Regulations governing landfills no longer allow unsupervised dumping and require that garbage be covered with soil on a daily basis. The days of the old style

Beverly Rustad Seeks TRF Title

(This is the third in a series of articles on candidates for the Miss Thief River Falls title at the official Miss America preliminary pageant July 30. The Jaycee Summerfest event will be presented in the Lincoln high school auditorium.)

Music is as important to Beverly Mae Rustad of McIntosh as water to a swimmer or honey to a bee. She sings, plays flute and piano, and has received recognition for her musical accomplishments in a number of areas.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Rustad of rural McIntosh, 18-year-old Beverly is a 1983 graduate of McIntosh-Winger high school. She is five feet four inches tall, weighs 115 pounds, has blonde hair and green eyes. For her pageant talent number she will play a flute solo entitled "Carnival of Venice".

In addition to taking part in high school band and chorus, Beverly took part in the musicals "Carousel" and "Cinderella" and the one-act play "To Burn a Witch". She also played volleyball and was a cheerleader for varsity football and basketball teams.

In 1981 she was selected for the District 30 honor choir. In 1982 she was named to the Bemidji state university northern Minnesota honors band, selected for "Who's Who Among American High School Students" and selected delegate to Minnesota Girls State.

In 1983 Beverly was named to "Who's Who in Music", the District 30 honor band, selected outstanding vocal solo performer at the District 30 grand concert, named to the John Philip Sousa national honors band and earned the John Philip Sousa band award and national choral award for McIntosh high school. She was also an honor graduate.

Beverly has two older sisters and a younger brother and lives on a dairy farm north of McIntosh. She enjoys reading, walking, jogging and lifting weights. This fall she will attend Concordia college, majoring in psychology with a minor in social work.

Olga Larson Is Honored With Scholarship

by Julie Easton
Times Reporter

Humility is a rare and wonderful quality. Most people want to make sure everyone knows of every achievement they have ever accomplished.

Not Olga Larson. She claims she is "just an ordinary person leading an ordinary life." Something in that statement makes her extraordinary!

Last week, a scholarship was established in the name of Olga Larson, who taught bookkeeping, typing and shorthand and tutored Latin at North Star college in Warren from 1923 to 1935.

At a reunion of former North Star students, it was decided that Olga's qualities of kindness, intelligence and real Christianity should be recognized through a scholarship for students attending Our Saviour's Christian academy, Thief River Falls.

When informed of the decision, Olga said she felt "overwhelmed!" She added, "It was like a bolt of lightning from the sky. I couldn't believe it."

Olga graduated from Lincoln high school and then attended more school in Thief River Falls. She related, "Years ago, we went through "Normal" training. It prepared you in many subject areas and we also had to do practice teaching."

Olga studied Latin for four years and she was also proficient in Greek at one time, even reading the New Testament in Greek. But constant study is needed to keep up with a language, she said.

In 1916 Olga married a pastor and thus her life as an instructor at North Star began. After 12 years at the combined high school and junior college, where her husband Albin was president,

CROCHETING remains one of Olga Larson's favorite hobbies—Last week, a scholarship to Our Saviour's Christian academy in Thief River Falls was established in Olga's name. She is a former teacher at North Star college, Warren. Planning to celebrate her 91st birthday in October, Olga comments, "The best thing is to keep busy and keep your mind alert."

33 Scholarships Awarded For Northland CC

Thirty-three merit scholars scholarships were recently awarded to students at Northland community college for the 1983-84 academic year. This award is based upon superior academic background as measured by grade point average and rank in class, as well as participating in student government and student activities.

The program is made possible through a special grant by Lowell and Marge Swenson to the Northland community college foundation. This is the fifth year of this special scholarship program at Northland.

Area high school freshmen who will be entering Northland as merit scholars in the 1983 fall quarter are: Lisa Glass, James Gobell, Vicki Hunt, Penny Jorde, Larry Moe, Steven Olson, Sherry Passa and Carla Swanson, all from Thief River Falls. Also Mary Duray, Karen Sovde and Laurie Taggart, Greenbush; Anita Carlson, Kevin Lundeen and Connie Sauve, Red Lake Falls; Jason Bergeron, Argyle; Julie Brewster, Warroad; Alan Melvie, Viking; Margaret Thunder, Redby; and Trisha VanCamp, Newfolden.

Returning sophomore students who were awarded scholarships were: Dean Booth, Joleen Gibson, Katy Kinsman, Christie LaCoursiere, Kelly Leppala, Tracy Lord, Jeff Moe, Ann Odegaard and Roberta Svir, all from Thief River Falls. Also Wendy Nicholls, Argyle; Geralyn Kuznia, Stephen; Kim Phillips, Lancaster; Lisa Wang, Fertile; and Karla Williams, Baudette.

TRFEA Total Request Is Figured At 41.8 Per Cent

Total requests by the Thief River Falls Education association (TRFEA) in opening 1983-1985 contract negotiations have been computed at an increase of 41.8 per cent in 1983-84 and an additional 11.8 per cent in 1984-85, according to Robert Block, superintendent of School District 564 in Thief River Falls.

Supt. Block presented computations to the board of education at its organizational meeting Friday morning in the school district service center.

At the meeting, Harry Sjulson was reelected chairman of the board with Myrle Carlson reelected treasurer and Arnt Aune reelected clerk. Greg Pribula was elected vice chairman to succeed Larry McDowell who was defeated for reelection earlier this year. Rev. Paul Bortnem was stated as a new member of the board and Carlson and Pribula were seated as reelected board members. Others serving on the board are Harlan (Hank) Hallstrom and Archie Cameron.

In reviewing the computations made of the TRFEA requests, Supt. Block said that they included both K-12 and AVTI contracts and covered such areas as proposed reduction in class sizes and benefits. Basic salary increase requested over the two-year period was about 25 per cent, the superintendent said.

John Roszak, negotiator for the board of education, reviewed with the board the TRFEA requests and discussed the board's counterproposal to be presented at the next negotiations session on July 13 at 7 p.m. in the Lincoln high school library.

Summary of the TRFEA requests, prepared by Supt. Block and business manager Harry Nelson, indicates a net increase in funds for 1983-84 of $2,016,072 from $4,818,457 in the current year to $6,834,529 in the coming school year. In 1984-85 the increase would be an additional $805,605 to $7,640,134.

Included in the 1983-84 request would be a boost in salary from $4,460,436 to $5,090,915 (an increase of $630,479); an increase in benefits from $225,411 to $380,031 (a rise of $154,620); and a hike in other costs from $132,610 to $1,363,583 (an increase of $1,230,973).

In 1984-85 the salary figure would go to $5,676,340, the benefits figure to $435,105 and the other cost category to $1,528,689, Supt. Block said. He pointed out that the computations are based on anticipated enrollments and other available figures and the methods of arriving at the projections are subject to questions. "If we can be shown that we have made unwarranted assumptions or used inaccurate statistics, we will adjust our estimates accordingly," he said.

Much of the computed increase comes in the area of maximum class sizes requested in grades K-12 and in an AVTI teaching day reduced from six to five hours. Maximum class sizes proposed by the TRFEA are 15 in kindergarten through grade three, 25 in grades four and five, and 25 in grades six through 12 plus other ARTIST OF THE MONTH being featured at the Northwest regional library with a showing of his work is Lowell Hoffard of Thief River Falls, who has been specializing in woodburning technique. He is shown with two of his works. Hoffard's art will be on display for a month at the library and the public is invited to stop and see it.

Clarence Gagner

Postmaster At Oklee Heads State Chapter

Oklee postmaster Clarence R. Gagner was elected president of the Minnesota chapter of the National Association of Postmasters of the United States (NAPUS) at its 48th annual convention held in St. Cloud June 22, 23 and 24.

Responsibilities of the position include representing the state's over 800 postmasters in areas of services, legislation, postmaster development and education, adverse actions and many others pertinent to postmasters and the public they serve. In his duties he will direct a 16-member executive committee

"The preservation of the private express statues is one of the biggest concerns of our association today," Gagner said. "We must not allow them to be abolished if the people of our country are going to continue to receive uninterrupted mail service as we know it today."

Clarence is married to the former Dianne Gunderson of Oklee. They have three children, he is active in community affairs and is a 20-year veteran of the Minnesota army national guard.

Lowell Hoffard Is TRF Artist Of The Month

(Thief River Falls community arts council features an area "Artist of the Month" every month. The artist's work will be on display at Northwest regional library in Thief River Falls for the entire month. Persons who would like to recommend an artist to be featured should contact the Thief River Falls community arts council at 681-2980 or 681-4056).

Woodburning is the art work being displayed during July in the Northwest regional library display case by Artist of the Month Lowell Hoffard, Thief River Falls.

Lowell's display includes a woodburning picture reproduction of "The Last Supper." This woodburning is on loan from Zion Lutheran church, to whom Scout Troop and Cub Pack 59 donated it memory of Jerry Wedul. In addition to pictures, Hoffard has done woodburning on gun cabinets, cradles, treasure chests, candle holders and chair backs. Last year he did woodburning on gun cabinets for the Thief River Falls and Crookston chapters of Ducks Unlimited. Hoffard states he loves a challenge and particularly enjoyed doing custom woodburning. "I'll do anything on wood," he says. "Just give me a picture and I'll do it. . ."

Hoffard says he has been interested in art ever since he was a child and has always loved to draw. However, he also has had other interests which took up much of his time. Employed as an insurance representative, he also enjoys hunting, fishing, golf, bowling and mechanics. He is also Cubmaster of Pack 59 and a member of Ducks Unlimited and Bass Anglers Sportsmen's Society. In addition, Lowell's family has been very important to him. He resides on 1618 Stevens Drive with his wife Jan, a receptionist for Northwestern hospital, and there five children: Timothy, Tony, Daniel, Jason and Melissa.

With all these interests and activities, Lowell felt art work held a lesser importance in his life. Then approximately two years ago, he was in a car accident which left him laid up for weeks. His interest in drawing was renewed, he reminisces, for therapeutic purposes. However the therapy soon became a great creative outlet for him. By beginning working with his child's small woodburning kit, Lowell soon began developing a style of his own. He credits his perserverance to develop this style not to himself, but to Dan Shafland and Bob Puetz. They refused to allow him to quit. As Lowell puts it, "My biggest boost (in art work) came when I was laid up. It came from the inspiration given and the faith shown in me by Dan Shafland and Bob Puetz. They're the ones who deserve the pat on the back. Without them, I wouldn't be doing this."

Besides woodburning, Lowell now does a great deal of drawing and printing. He has shown his work at the Pennington county fair and Country Class Arts.

Jobs Program Employs Youth For Summer

Young people are fixing up the landscape, staffing day-care centers, helping shop owners and working in a variety of other jobs this summer as a result of the Inter-County community council's youth employment programs.

Mary Lou Harthun, youth programs director, said that 523 young people from Kittson, Marshall, Norman, Pennington, Polk, Red Lake and Roseau counties were placed in jobs at 280 work sites.

Total of 45 youth are working in private businesses. The others are employed in public and non-profit agencies. Inter-County community council provides wages or training subsidies made available through the Governor's youth program and the comprehensive employment and training act.

Most jobs began on June 13 and will last for eight weeks. Young people are earning from $3.35 to $4.50 an hour and are working from 32 to 40 hours a week.

Harthun said that many of the young workers are from families with low incomes. "In these programs, the young people earn a wage, get good supervision, gain work experience and explore career options," she said.

Costs Listed For Vacation In Minnesota

The classic Minnesota vacation experience is the five to seven day breather in the northwoods or in lake country, according to the Minnesota tourism division.

Resorts range from ultra-modern to pleasantly rustic and offer four basic rate plans: "American Plan", including lodging and three meals per day; "Modified American Plan", including two meals per day (usually breakfast and dinner); "European Plan", including lodging only (guests purchase meals separately at a restaurant on the premises); and "Housekeeping Plan", where guests prepare their own meals in accommodations with kitchenettes.

Resort rates vary according to features offered — jacuzzi, stables and golf will ultimately cost more than wooded hiking trails and a fishing boat. Prices for a week's stay range greatly from about $125 per week up to $600 per week, from $25 per night to $200 per night. Lodging accommodations vary from cottages to condominiums. Be alert to special off-season rates offered in spring and fall — at a reduction of 15 to 40 per cent — and special weekend and three day packages.

Resort stays, though traditional Minnesota vacations, are not the only relaxation and recreation options available to residents. A weekend sightseeing jaunt in Duluth (two days, one night) including hotel accommodations, two breakfasts, one lunch, one dinner and guided tours can be had for about $48 per person per night, double occupancy. (A round-trip ticket on Amtrak from Minneapolis-St. Paul to Duluth is $29.50.)

Weekend theater packages in a Twin Cities hotel, complete with French ambience and haute cuisine run from $27.50 to $57 per person for one night to $52.50 to $96.00 per person for two nights. A wide variety of motels also offer weekend packages, but if you want the lodging without the frills, expect to pay about $25 to $50 per night (outside of the metro area throughout the state). In most cases, you'll also enjoy cable television and continental breakfasts.

For campers, there are a number of facilities and grounds. Fees range from approximately $5 per night to $12 per night and reflect a range of offerings — from basic and full hookups to laundry, shower and pool.

Minnesota offers a host of vacation opportunities for just about every budget. So this time before you look far and wide for a place to vacation, look near and dear.

CPAs Advise On Preparation For Career Change

Starting over with a new job or lifestyle may not be easy, but others have taken the plunge and found that shifting around has its own rewards. It will take planning and some shrewd evaluation of what you really want to do or where you really want to go, a realistic financial plan, and more than a little gumption, notes the Minnesota society of CPAs. Although there are no reliable figures on how long to plan or how much money to spend, it's reasonable to say the more you have of each, the better off you'll be.

Planning should begin with evaluating your current net worth, CPAs suggest. Start by drawing up a personal financial statement, listing assets and liabilities. Once you subtract your total debts from the value of your savings and property, you'll know your net worth. That figure can be translated into how much you can afford to spend and how much you may be able to borrow, if necessary, when you start over.

Next, set up a financial plan. How much would a move cost? How long can you subsist between jobs? How much must you spend on a new place to live, or to open the doors of a new business?

CPAs recommend asking trade associations for information about the costs of certain businesses. Chambers of commerce can usually give you useful information. Local banks and even moving companies are also reliable sources of information about a city and its economy.

To avoid surprises, look at published official figures describing the living costs in a city. A divorced woman with two children who recently moved from the northeast to the southwest was surprised to find rent costs 25 per cent higher and child care costs double what she had been paying.

To make up these increased costs she scrimped on clothes and entertainment. Before moving she allowed for a deposit and rent on an apartment, as well as the cost of moving her belongings. Once she arrived, she found there were unexpected costs reregistering her car and getting a new driver's license.

Depending on circumstances, making plans for starting over can cut two ways, CPAs note. The increasing number of two-income couples may discourage one spouse's planning because the other spouse may not be willing to sacrifice a good job to move.

However, two incomes can work in one spouse's favor. A psychologist recently traded his practice for a small medical services company. He says the decision to take on the business was easier because of backup from a working spouse.

The expenses of putting a business on its feet absorbed some of their funds for leisure activites, he notes. As part of planning for the business, he closed credit card accounts.

Yet another couple, who planned for years before leaving their old jobs and starting a business, began by spending annual vacations visiting communities looking for a restaurant they could run in a town they could enjoy. Before buying a restaurant, one spouse took correspondence courses in restaurant management, while the other studied accounting at a community college. Buying the restaurant meant selling their home and borrowing on insurance policies.

Costs vary greatly in different cities, CPAs note. So do average salaries. Before you make your move to a different city, ask about property taxes, utility costs, the price of an average home, broker or rental agency fees, and even the amount of highway congestion to gauge the impact, physical and emotional, of a daily commute.

When you set up your cost projection, estimate how long it will take to raise the money you need, CPAs suggest. Some people prefer to keep a financial cushion — equivalent to one year's salary — on the side, in case plans do not work out.

Financial planning can help you overcome any unexpected expenses. Complete planning, and some money on the side, can give you the freedom to concentrate your efforts on what you want to do.

Stone Attends Reunion Of CCC Campers

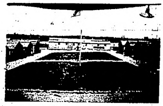
Alerted to a reunion through a general notice published in the Times, Neil Stone of Thief River Falls had an opportunity June 19 to visit with a number of others who put in time at CCC camp Charles in the mid 1930's. The camp was located near Brimson between Duluth and Virginia.

The camp and reunion were featured in the summer issue of "Lake Superior Port Cities", a magazine type publication published in Duluth. The article was written by Eleanor Everett.

Stone served at the camp from October of 1934 through December of 1936 and recalls that most of the campers were from 18 to 28 years of age. They received $30 a month of which $25 was sent home and they were paid $5. Other campers from the area that Stone recalls include Art Stroble, a brother of Harold Stroble of Thief River Falls, Sonny St. John of East Grand Forks and a fellow named Bud Hoff from somewhere in this area.

The camp consisted of 12 barracks with 16 men per barracks, Stone said. The civilian conservation corps (CCC) was initiated by President Roosevelt in the depression years of the 1930's and Camp Charles was one of the first. Stone said he never knew the official name of the camp; it was either called Camp 719 or the Brimson camp during his stay there.

Men at the camp worked at a number of forestry and related projects as well as getting some formal education. Many of them went directly into military service from the camps since the last camps closed in 1941 and by then the nation was involved in the World War II.



THIS 1935 PHOTO of CCC Camp 719 was taken by Neil Stone of Thief River Falls from the roof of the mess hall, looking toward the administration building. There were 12 barracks at the camp, each containing 16 workers. Stone attended a reunion of the people who had served at the camp after reading about the planned reunion in the Times. He worked at the camp from October of 1934 to December of 1936.

CAMP LEADERS during the mid 1930's at CCC camp 719 were in attendance at the reunion last month attended by Neil Stone of Thief River Falls, one of the workers at the camp from 1934 to 1936. Left to right are J.C. (Buzz) Ryan, 83, ranger in charge of the project who now lives in nearby Makinen; John (Sergeant) Majors, St. Paul; Max Risvold, mess sergeant, now living in San Capistrano, CA; Darrell Johnson, company clerk, now living in Bethesda, MD; and John Ek, now president of the alumni association, Duluth.

Local Students Achieve MSU Dean's List

Seven Thief River Falls students were named to the Moorhead state University dean's list in recognition of academic achievement spring quarter.

Honored students were Karen Aas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ward Aas; Mary Amundson, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Roger Amundson; Roberta Engel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cordes Engel; Wade Hoppe, son of Mrs. Jack Hoppe; Kathleen Kjos, daughter of Lucille Kjos; Gary Laidley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Laidley and Craig Molstad, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Molstad.

Disposal Of Garbage Poses Area Problem

At present rate of use, the Gentilly site has a maximum expected life of 20 years before it is considered full and has to be abandoned. That life expectancy could possibly be extended by reducing the volume of garbage buried there. This might be accomplished either through sorting of garbage to eliminate compostable things like leaves and branches, (an option which the city is already studying); or if one or more of the other users of the site discontinue using it. Either way, maintenance costs would be unlikely to decrease, meaning that Polk county would have to increase dumping fees to make up the balance.

On the other hand, the Gentilly site could be decertified at almost any time. Requirements established by the environmental protection agency (EPA) and the pollution control agency (PCA) seem to be growing more stringent all the time. The state will now only license landfills for 10 years, and requires that they be recertified a minimum of every five years. Monitoring of the sites requires test borings to ensure that groundwater supplies are not being contaminated by leaks from the site. Detection of a possible leak could result in practically immediate closure of the site.

This brings us to a second option which can be considered, that of trying to locate another landfill site. For the very reasons which could make continued use of the Gentilly site an expensive and somewhat risky proposition, siting a new landfill may not be an easy task. Locations with proper soil conditions are limited, and even when they are found, local opposition must be overcome. High expenses for monitoring and operation of the site remain, as does the risk that it can be closed down on short notice.

Under recently passed state and federal legislation, including the "superfund" bill, entities responsible for the dumping of hazardous wastes can be held liable for damages and the cost of cleanup if a site should leak or otherwise become hazardous. If the source of contamination cannot be determined, all users of a site may be charged on the basis of percentage they contributed to the total volume of a site. The law does not make exceptions for materials dumped prior to its passage, nor does it set future time limits on responsibility.

"We could be sitting on a potential time bomb," comments Murphy. "We know that what's going in there isn't all paper and brush." Although packaging materials compose a large part of what goes into people's garbage, unknown quantities and combinations of chemicals exist in the form of discarded paints, cosmetics, medicines, household cleaners, pesticides, etc. "There's really no way of predicting how that stuff could react together," commented Murphy. "It could be a real witches brew down there."

While speculation on the makeup of garbage in landfills may be impossible, according to Willis Mattison, regional director for the Minnesota PCA, recent research indicates that it is not composting away the way people assumed it would years ago. Decomposition is resulting in formation of compounds which are primarily acidic in nature, and some concern has been expressed for how these chemicals may affect permeability of the clay soils which have been counted on to prevent leakage.

"With the problems and liabilities inherent in landfills," says Murphy, I don't think there is any doubt that they are on the way out as an acceptable method of disposing of solid wastes."

Alternative proposals have recently been made to the Thief River Falls city council and Pennington county board, and will be considered in a future article.

ASCS Requires Loans On '83 Wheat For PIK

Wheat producers in Marshall county who are eligible to receive their payment-in-kind (PIK) from commodity credit corporation (CCC) stocks will have to obtain price support loans on their 1983 production, according to Leo Orpen, Marshall county ASCS committee chairman.

"The loans will then be redeemed and sold to the CCC for PIK," he said. Producers who have no 1983-crop wheat for harvest or those who had insufficient wheat for harvest to satisfy their PIK needs will receive their PIK from CCC stocks.

Farmers who have 1983 wheat stored in an approved warehouse or an approved structure on the farm may obtain a loan on the production in the regular manner. "They will receive storage payments on the PIK quantity beginning on the PIK availability date through the earlier of either the redemption date, or the final PIK availability date," Orpen said.

Farmers whose wheat is not stored in an approved warehouse or on the farm may obtain special harvest for PIK loans. "We will allow them to obtain a loan by certifying that the requested quantity was harvested from an eligible farm. The loan request must be made under harvest but before the producer has disposed of the wheat. The special loan procedures permit farmers to obtain 1983 wheat loans, satisfy PIK needs, and sell, at their discretion, the wheat all in the same day," he said.

Special harvest for PIK loans are also available to farmers with 1983 wheat stored in an approved warehouse or an approved structure on the farm.

The ASCS official said some producers, eligible for special harvest for PIK loans, may already have a lien on their 1983-crop wheat and have previously assigned their PIK to another person. "In such cases, the farmer will be required to execute a document entitled, "sale of wheat for PIK purposes." Lien waivers will be required for regular loans obtained for harvest for PIK.

Further details on 1983 wheat loans for PIK may be obtained from the county ASCS office.

State Highway Map For 83-84 Now Available

The map, now available to the public, will have wider distribution than in previous years under a three-agency agreement, said Commissioner Richard P. Braun, Minnesota department of transportation (Mn-DOT).

In response to the public's request for more maps and easier distribution, Mn-DOT which prepares the map has signed a joint agreement with the Minnesota department of administration and the office of tourism.

Maps are free to the public on a one-per-person basis by contacting the Minnesota Travel Information Center, 240 Bremer Building, 419 N. Robert St., St. Paul, MN 55101. Additional copies may be purchased either for personal use or for resale from the Minnesota State Documents Center, 117 University Ave., St. Paul, MN 55155, or call 612-297-3000 in the Twin Cities. The statewide toll-free number for either office is 1-800-652-9747.

The biennial map depicts the theme — "Transportation — Minnesota's Lifelines." the photographs give a colorful sampling of the state's seasons and tourist regions: combining grain, ships loading and unloading at the Duluth seaway port, a frosty woodland beckoning winter enthusiasts, Gooseberry Falls on the scenic North Shore, busy shoppers in a mall and Minneapolis-St. Paul international airport.

New information on the map includes principal mileage and routes between major cities in the continental United States, completed interstate highways and addresses and phone numbers of the seven travel information centers in the six major tourism regions. For the first time, the TIP (Turn In Poachers) toll-free telephone number for anonymous callers to report violators of the state game and fish laws is listed.

As in previous map editions there are inset maps for the Twin Cities metropolitan area including hospitals and for Minnesota cities of Albert Lea, Austin, Bemidji, Brainerd, Duluth, Fairbault, Hibbing, Mankato, Moorhead, New Ulm, Owatonna, Rochester, St. Cloud, Virginia, Willmar and Winona. Population figures from the 1980 census are listed.

Also provided is an index to major state cities complete with mileage figures and cities with scheduled intercity passenger transportation by air, bus and rail. State parks are listed including all the facilities at each location including those accessible and usable by persons with mobility impairments.

Abuse Training Aimed To Stop Wife Beating

Area professionals who attended a workshop sponsored by the Ripley alliance for battered women recently, were given some sobering statistics on domestic violence, as well as some suggestions on how men who batter can be treated to help end the cycle of abuse.

Instructors for the workshop were Gunnar Bankovics, men's therapist and coordinator of professional training for the domestic abuse project (DAP); and Dora Schumacher, M.A., licensed psychologist, women's therapist for the DAP. Bankovics noted that the DAP has been providing treatment for men who batter, and for their spouses and children since it opened in Minneapolis in January of 1980. They have assisted over 900 families in that time. In addition to serving as a therapist, he spends approximately half of his time conducting training sessions for professionals across Minnesota and in several neighboring states.

Pointing to statistics on the problem of domestic abuse, Bankovics noted that violence was reported as a factor in 80 per cent of the divorce cases studied in England and Scotland, with similar figures noted in the United States and other countries. "With a 50 per cent divorce rate that points to how high the incidence of domestic abuse is," he said. He also noted that Minnesota department of corrections statistics from 1978 to 1980 recorded 50,000 incidents of men assaulting women, and 63 incidents of women assaulting men. Those statistics are considered conservative, with FBI studies indicating that only one out of 10 incidents of domestic assault ever come to the attention of law enforcement personnel.

Treatment of wife abuse (the term "wife" is used in the sense of a cohabiting partner rather than in a legal sense) as a problem is a relatively new idea, he notes, which has only really received serious consideration in the last 10 years. He notes that as recently as 100 years ago a wife was considered to be the property of her husband, and beating her was considered to be perfectly legal. While wife beating is no longer legal, he notes that society still sanctions many of the attitudes which make the practice difficult to stop.

He commented that if couples in treatment at the DAP wanted to pursue an attempt to save their relationship, counselors were willing to help them, but noted, "Our primary goal is to stop the violence, rather than to save the relationship."

Dealing with the problem has primarily been a result of the women's liberation movement, and making treatment available for men has been an outgrowth of the shelter movement. One of the problems which battered women face is that while they may have shelter facilities and social services available, when they go home the problem is still there.

Until the man learns to deal with his problems in a nonviolent way, the cycle of abuse continues to repeat itself. Emphasizing the fact that there is a cycle in domestic abuse, Bankovics notes that 64 per cent of the men seen at the DAP were either abused as children or witnessed abuse between their parents. "Violence begets violence," he said.

Treatment of people involved in domestic violence must begin with the recognition that "no one deserves to be beaten, no matter what they did." Surprisingly, some women may have difficulty in understanding or accepting that concept, feeling guilt for not being able to satisy their man, even if his attacks are precipitated by really minor incidents, or without any provocation.

The fact that many men feel remorse, and are very loving or apologetic after a violent attack often clouds the issue with feelings of love, and a belief that it won't happen again. Although the woman may try to change to please him, the man's guilt over the attacks may actually serve to increase his insecurity, making him even more suspicious and unpredictable. Although drugs and alcohol are frequently involved in cases of domestic abuse, Bankovics notes that they must be treated as a separate problem.

Treatment for the man and woman is usually better if they are handled individually, according to Bankovics. Suspicion and fear may prevent either of the parties from speaking openly to the therapist in front of their partner. Treatment for the woman is usually based on increasing her sense of self worth and assertiveness.

Treatment for the man can be more complicated. He too, usually has a low level of self-esteem, which is often compensated for by downgrading the woman. One of the most important aspects of treatment is teaching him to recognize the difference between anger and agression. Bankovics notes that anger can be a positive motivating force for coping with stress. Agression, on the other hand, must be recognized as "something that only gets him in trouble."

By keeping an "anger diary," the man can be taught to recognize the difference between a wide range of emotions, which are often interpreted as anger. By teaching him to recognize when his feelings are building up to a potentially explosive point, he can learn how to control his emotions by using relaxation techniques and exercises. Men are also taught to analyze their feelings to determine the difference between what they might believe their wife is doing and what is happening in reality. Jealousy often distorts perceptions of minor incidents so that they become blown out of proportion.

Finally, the men are encouraged to develop a support system, so that they develop relationships with other men. By learning to verbalize their problems, they can often avoid potentially violent situations. Recognizing that there is safety within a group, they are given permission to break societal rules such as the belief that "men always have to be tough."

Other aspects of the training sessions included perspectives of domestic abuse, characteristics, dynamics and the cycle of male to female violence, interviewing men and women and intervention strategies, role playing sessions and a question and evaluation period.

Session was ended with a review of the facilities available in this area to deal with problems of domestic abuse, which do not presently include any type of treatment for men who batter. The desire was expressed that the 34 professionals attending, which included representatives of social services, law enforcement, clergy, crisis centers, mental health facilities, attorneys and prosecutors, psychologists, public health nurses, hospital workers and chemical dependency counselors, would work together to organize some type of a support group for men who batter.

The class size maximums would add $869,440 to the cost of district operations the first year and increase to $982,229 in 1984-85, according to the school administrative computations. Reducing AVTI teaching day from six to five hours would increase costs $215,797 the first year and $240,614 the second year of the contract.

In the K-12 area, salary totals are proposed to increase from $3,490,910 in 1982-83 to $3,990,504 in 1983-84 and $449,382 in 1984-85. Included in the "other costs" category are such items as additional holidays, early retirement, severance pay, increased sick leave with unlimited accumulation, professional association leave and department head differential.

Vern Treat was named to the administrative position of student services coordinator at the area vocational-technical institute in other board action Friday.

Regular meeting of the board scheduled for July 11 was re-scheduled to July 18 at 7:30 p.m. in the board room.

Olga Larson Honored With Scholarship

the Larsons served pastorates in Alvarado, St. Peter, New Richland and East Chain.

"I played the organ in any church," Olga stated. Her oldest daughter, Florence, who was also present during the Times interview, joked, "Of course any pastor was smart to marry a woman who played the organ and then he also had his daughters learn to play."

Belief in education was passed on to all of the six Larson children — all three of the daughters and one son eventually became teachers themselves.

One more thing to add to the list that makes Olga special is the fact that she will be 91 in October. That alone is amazing, but the fact that she is totally independent, aware of all current events and active in reading, crocheting, quilting, canning and sewing, makes it even more fantastic. Maybe that's why she looks 70 or younger!

"The best thing is to keep busy and keep your mind alert. You can't sit and twiddle your thumbs. We've always had to work hard," Olga commented.

Florence added, "We are a family of survivors; we have been very active and healthy in behavior."

Now another new experience awaits Olga. She will soon move with her sister Anna Bjorge from the home of her father, located near Northland community college, to an apartment in town.

Her brother, Alfred Longren, who died this spring, had farmed the family homestead and kept up the house. "We had great times and Alfred was so good to us," Olga commented.

"We love our home. We used to have an awful lot of flowers, but we couldn't this year," she related, but, pointing to the advantages of the move, she added, "I drive to church every Sunday and to town. It's wonderful that we will be so close to town."

With that attitude, combined with her constant humility, Olga Larson is acutally high above the ordinary.

Another duty of your funeral director is to plan any special service or rites to be conducted by a fraternal or military organization. He will arrange all details so that their service will be coordinated with the essential religious service. He can also assist your attorney in determining any survivor benefits offered by such fraternal and military organizations.

With increased taxes, delayed cost of living adjustments and minor changes, Congress has tried a "quick fix" on our social security system. This "quick fix" will not do the job and the social security system will be back in even bigger trouble soon.

The social security system includes a pension and health care program for older Americans, survivors' insurance benefits for orphans and widows, and more benefits for the disabled. As of 1983, the old age and survivors' insurance trust fund was out of money and borrowing to continue to make payments. As of 1984-85, the medicare and disability insurance trusts will be out of money, running deficits that the system actuaries believe will be three times bigger than the OASI deficit just treated by Congress.

The problems are many and need to be understood.

When social security old age benefits were set in the 1930's, men lived until 60, women until 64, and the social security program didn't start paying off until you were 65. That meant that most of the people paying in to social security (along with an equal contribution from their employers) were not going to be around to collect. The benefits were low, the taxes were low (a maximum of $30 per year versus more than $2,000 per year today, plus employer matching), and the chances for collecting were even lower.

Today the average life span for men is about 71 and for women about 78. This converts to a probability that everyone will survive and collect social security benefits for from five to 13 years. The population has changed so that where we originally had 16-25 workers for every retiree, we now have about three workers for every retired person on social security pensions. Benefits have been pushed up and retirement has been encouraged.

The politicians who did all this never figured out who was going to pay for it or how it would be paid. They didn't even know what their promises would cost and gave out with a mumbo-jumbo that almost convinced us that we were getting something for nothing.

The social security program also included survivors' benefits for those whose breadwinner died and left a mother and minor children. These benefits originally continued until the surviving children were 18. Modifications were made in the law to continue benefits until the children completed their college training. This cost so much that Congress had to go back to the original definition of payments until the children were 18.

In both the old age pensions and the survivors' benefits, the original payments were within what the actuaries felt could be afforded. The benefit increases were added by politicians without regard for the availability of money to pay the bills when they came due.

The social security program also includes medicare and medicaid payments, originally estimated as a maximum cost effort of less than one hundred million dollars per year. The costs are now more than thirty billion dollars and rising fast so that astronomical deficits will be with us starting in 1984.

The use of cost of living adjustments has pushed up the benefits by billions of dollars every year. There has been no effort to determine where the money to pay these cost of living adjustments is coming from, but it is politically good for votes.

The program also includes payments to the disabled. These payments keep rising as we keep expanding the definition of disability. Some of those now described as disabled were fighting during World War II, and came back to jobs that they could handle. All of the disabled today await their monthly government checks and rent subsidies. There has been very little done to place the disabled into self-sustaining jobs.

This social security program, with ever expanding payments, will require 50 to 100 per cent increases in social security taxes, with the average American required, in the future, to pay up some $5,000 per year (with employer matching on top of that) to keep the existing program and benefits going. It won't happen, and anyone who believes that we could collect that level of tax has been drinking something stronger than water. The Washington bureaucrats don't believe that freedom can survive when everyone wants more benefits but will not pay for them.

There are answers. Americans must work longer, to 68 or 70, before retiring. Pensions must be supplements to a savings program, not the total support. Cost of living and the whole medicare and medicaid effort must be contained at an affordable level. These changes must be made, but the politicians here tell that revising social security takes more guts and backbone than we have. I hope they are wrong!

That's Straight Talk!

Propose Sale Of Federal Land In MN

Four parcels of federal land in Minnesota will be offered for sale September 16 by the bureau of land management (BLM), the U.S. interior department agency has announced.

"The public interest would best be served by getting these parcels out of federal ownership and onto the tax rolls," said BLM eastern states director G. Curtis Jones Jr. "The fact that these parcels are small and scattered over a broad geographical area makes them difficult and uneconomical for us to manage as public lands."

"All four parcels are unimproved properties suitable for farming or grazing. They include a 280-acre tract presently under lease for agricultural use in Lake of the Woods county; a 14-acre parcel adjoining the Red River of the North in Kittson county; a four-acre parcel under lease for farming in Crow Wing county; and a half-acre parcel adjoining Moore lake in Wright county. Buyers of the latter three parcels will have to arrange for legal access to the properties.

"The minimum bid for any of these parcels will be the property's appraised fair market value," Jones said, adding that sealed bids only will be accepted at the BLM district office in Milwaukee, WI, between August 19 and September 15. The sale will be held under modified competitive bidding procedures, under which BLM has given certain interested parties (in some cases, adjoining landowners) the option bo buy the property by matching the highest sealed bid.

Details concerning the sale properties and the bidding process are available from Robert Gausman, BLM Eastern States Office 350 S. Pickett Street, Alexandria, VA 22304, telephone (703) 235-2871.

BLM announced the Minnesota land sale in a "Notice of Realty Action" appearing in the June 13 "Federal Register." If the bureau receives significant adverse comments stemming either from the "Notice of Realty Action" or notification of the appropriate congressional committees and delegations, these comments will be evaluated, and could result in modifications to or cancellation of the sale. Interested parties should check with Robert Gausman at the above address in order to stay advised of any changes.

JEAN LITTLE of Bemidji has been learning ways of independent living at Courage Residence in Golden Valley. Disabled from a progressive muscular disease, she has strengthened her muscles with exercises and is shown here in the kitchen of her Courage Residence apartment.

Bemidji Woman Learns Living As Independent

Jean Little, Bemidji, is learning to cook and to drive at Courage Residence in Golden Valley, a suburb of Minneapolis. Developing "survival skills" such as these is part of her plan to live independently. Jean, 29, disabled from a progressive muscular disease, is working toward four main goals set when she moved into the independent living facility last February. She wants to live on her own, drive a car, go back to school and find work.

Jean was diagnosed as having "Char-Marie-Tooth" when she was three years old. She attended regular elementary school and two years of high school but completed her last two years of high school on the homebound program because of her disability. She has limited use of her hands and uses a wheelchair for mobility.

Since she was graduated from high school, Jean has been living with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Darrell Little, and her two brothers and sister in Bemidji.

"I've been keeping busy with lots of things, like needlepoint, crewel and gardening," she said. "But I knew I wanted to be able to be on my own — the only think I didn't know is what I was capable of doing. So I came to Courage Residence to find out. I thought it was about time I do something besides stay home."

Courage Residence adjoins and is operated by Courage Center, which depends on support from United Ways and Courage Appeals as well as contributions from individuals and organizations. It operates nearly 70 programs in rehabilitation, recreation and independent living for children and adults with physical disabilities and speech, hearing and vision impairments. The residence serves as a kind of stepping stone into community living for 64 young disabled adults from all over the nation who come from a variety of dependent living situations.

"Independence" means taking responsibility for one's own affairs, including exploring capabilities, deciding on a vocation and finding and renting housing. In some situations, it also means learning to hire and direct an attendant to help with daily needs. "I may not need an attendant," Jean said. "Maybe a housekeeper once a month to do some cleaning and someone to help with shopping."

Jean has taken advantage of many of the services available at Courage Center. She recently took the written driver's test for her permit and passed. Now she will be evaluated in Courage Center's special van with hand controls. She has learned to cook in the accessible occupational therapy kitchen by using adapted equipment such as a velcro cuff to help grasp the utensils.

"In physical therapy," Jean explained, "I'm still working on getting my wheelchair in and out of the back seat of the car. I have strengthened my muscles a lot by independent exercises like pulling weights."

Jean has also enjoyed recreational activities such as table tennis, bowling, swimming and games. She hopes to join an "outdoors club" this summer which plans fishing and canoeing trips. She'd like to fit a Courage Center life enrichment class in art or music into her schedule but so far has been "too busy."

Jean has taken a step toward her goal of finding a job by working with a counselor from the Minnesota division of vocational rehabilitation. She recently started a six-week course in "Introduction to Human Services" at the Minneapolis community college. "I'd like to work with children or in special education, she said, but right now I'm just exploring." She plans to remain in the Twin Cities area when she moves out of the residence.

Summing up her Courage Center experience, Jean said, "I really think being here has helped me a lot. I was surprised to find out that I need a lot less help than I thought I did. I would recommend it to anyone who wants to become more independent. They'll help you figure out what you can do."

More information about Courage Residence or other Courage Center services is available from Courage Center, 3915 Golden Valley Road, Golden Valley, MN 55442, 612-588-0811.

USDA Proposes New Processing Food System

U.S. department of agriculture today proposed a new system which will allow the food and nutrition service to ship USDA process and cheddar cheese, butter, non-fat dry milk, and honey directly to commercial food processors, for use in the manufacture of processed foods.

These foods then would be sold to eligible schools and charitable institutions at lower prices that reflect the value of the donated commodities contained in them.

Assistant secretary of agriculture Mary C. Jarratt said the new plan, called the "National Commodity Processing (NCP) System" would make lower-priced processed foods available to schools and institutions which are not able to get them now.

Currently, surplus butter, non-fat dry milk, cheese, rice and honey are provided free to state agencies that contract with food processors to convert the surplus foods into items that are easier to use.

According to Jarratt, many food processors who market in several states do not participate in state programs because it would be necessary to negotiate separate processing agreements with each stae. Some states do not have active processing programs. Because the new NCP system requires a processor to sign only one agreement, USDA hopes that more firms will elect to participate.

"Schools and institutions will be able to take greater advantage of surplus commodities that the government donates. They should get a wider variety of finished products made from the donated commodities. Processors will benefit by increasing their school and institutional sales and the government will be able to reduce its inventory of surplus foods," Jarratt said.

Interim regulations appear in the "Federal Register." Comments should be sent by September 15 to: Gwena Kay Tibbits, Chief, Program Monitoring and Policy Development Branch, Food Distribution Division, Food and Nutrition Service, 3101 Park Center Drive, Alexandria, Virginia 22302.

Safety Tips For Holiday Driver Given

Minnesotans have done an excellent job in reducing deaths from traffic accidents, posting a 26 per cent reductipn in fatalities from 1981 to 1982 and the lowest mileage death rate (2.0 per 100 million vehicle miles) in the nation. Traffic fatalities for 1983, however, are slightly ahead of last year with traditionally high-fatality months of July and August still ahead.

Historically, the 4th of July holiday period has shown more deaths on Minnesota roadways than any other holiday period. Last year, 14 people were killed during the 4th of July holiday, and another 389 were injured. Minnesota safety council anticipates that 12-15 people could die during the 1983 78-hour holiday period.

Safety council said that if all motorists and passengers wore safety belts and fastened children in crash-tested child safety restraints, traffic fatalities could be reduced dramatically. Other commonsense traffic safety tips include:

(1) Obey posted speed limits.

(2) If you plan to drink, don't drive. Elect one person in your group to refrain from drinking and serve as chauffeur for the day.

(3) Start trips early enough or late enough to avoid rush hour traffic. Plan your route to avoid roadways under construction or repair.

(4) Remember to use your headlights when travelling from sunset to sunrise or whenever visibility is restricted (fog, overcast, etc.). Headlights will help you see better and will help people see you, especially when the sun is shining in your rear window.

(5) Practice defensive driving. Be prepared to react to other drivers on the road.

Three Local Students To Attend AVTI

According to information received from the admissions office of the Thief River Falls area vocational-technical institute, three Thief River Falls students have been accepted for enrollment.

Dale Rupprecht, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Rupprecht, has been accepted into the farm operation and management program beginning in November.

Bruce and Brian Hanson, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Edvin H. Hanson of rural Thief River Falls, have been accepted into the auto mechanics program beginning August 29.

State Farmers Reduce Acres On Most Crops

Minnesota farmer's changed their minds about increasing their soybean acreage and instead planted more corn than was indicated in the April intention survey, according to the Minnesota agricultural statistics service. Farmers planted 5.1 million acres of corn, up 500,000 acres since the April survey. Nonetheless, corn plantings still fell 30 per cent short of last year's level.

Soybean acreage is estimated at 4.65 million acres, down 300,000 acres since the April survey and 94 per cent of a year earlier.

All wheat acreage at 2.34 million acres is down 28 per cent from last year. Spring wheat at 2.20 million acres is off by 28 per cent. Winter wheat's 100,000 acres is up 11 per cent while durum's 40,000 acres is half of last year.

Producers planted 2.50 million acres of oats, up 39 per cent from 1982. However, since 50 per cent is slated for cover crop on PIK acres, only 1.25 million acres are estimated fro grain, which is down 23 per cent from last year.

Barley at 950,000 acres is up six per cent from last season.

All sunflower acreage of 250,000 acres is down 54 per cent from last year. Oil varieties are down 52 per cent and non-oil acreage is at 10,000, down 71 per cent from 1982.

Flax at 75,000 acres is down 37 per cent from last year and dry edible bean acreage of 55,000 is down 42 per cent.

Summer potato acreage of 5,200 is down 22 per cent from last year. All hay for harvest at 2.93 million acres is up two per cent. Alfalfa acreage of 2.00 million is up three per cent.

Rye at 200,000 acres is up 67 per cent from 1982.

In the United States, corn planted for all purposes is estimated at 60.1 million acres, down 27 per cent from last year but up two per cent from the April intentions. Growers expect to harvest 52.5 million acres for grain, down 28 per cent from 1982.

All wheat acreage seeded is estimated to be 76.6 million acres, down 12 per cent from last year. Durum wheat seeded acreage at 2.55 million acres, is 41 per cent less than last year. Other spring wheat, at 11.6 million acres, is 30 per cent below 1982. Winter wheat acreage for harvest, at 47.7 million acres, is down 18 per cent from last year.

Soybean area planted is estimated at 63.3 million acres, down 12 per cent from a year earlier and seven per cent less than 1981.

Oats acreage is estimated at 20.2 million, up 42 per cent from last year and oats for grain is estimated at 9.05 million acres which is down 14 per cent from last year.

Barley is estimated at 10.5 million acres planted up 9.5 per cent from 1982.

Rye acreage planted is estimated at 2.77 million acres, up 5.5 per cent from a year ago.

Flax acres planted are estimated at 615,000, down 28.5 per cent from 1982.

All sunflowers at 3.1 million acres would be down 38 per cent from 1982.

Sugarbeets at 1.07 million acres would be up 1.3 per cent from last year.

Independence Or Freedom

Following comments were written by C. William Swank, executive vice president of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, Inc., and published in Farmland News:

"A recent sermon treated the question of the difference between independence and freedom. The gist of the thought was that while we are talking a great deal about independence, what most people truly want is freedom of choice.

"We are not independent of each other as a society, nor would we really want to be but, rather, we want the freedom to choose between the various options that are available. We in agriculture may be using the two terms as identical terms when, in fact, they are quite different. Even worse, we'll perhaps support the concept of independence when, in fact, what we want is freedom.

Ask most farmers why they are farming and they'll indicate they like the independence that comes with farming and like being their own boss. Actually, farming is far from being independent. The farmer is dependent on the weather, the markets, the international situation, the overall economy, and the cost of money, just to name a few.

In addition, farmers are dependent on each other for virtually everything they want to do beyond the production of each individual farm. To have purchasing power, they form supply cooperatives. To have marketing power, they form bargaining or marketing cooperatives, and to have market impact for justice and equity within the market, they form what is known as handling cooperatives.

In order to have political-social influence, farmers form general farm organizations that can represent them before the general assembly and the congress as lobbyists and monitor their interest on a day by day basis with the regulatory agencies. They form commodity and breed associations to give special attention to special interests in crop or livestock areas. All this is a far cry from independence, but it does speak strongly of freedom. Farmers, as do others, enjoy the freedom to form organizations and to join together for group activity within the general confines of the laws of the state and nation.

Because our minds tend to be on independence rather than freedom we may fail to see the power of organized activity in areas that could generate better prices and better profits. We tend to avoid giving up any of our independence in order to achieve the power of group action because it's felt that once gone — gone forever. If joining a group action can be seen as an exercise of freedom, then the phobia might go away and the focus could be on the possibility of group action. Economics has taught us for years the power to raise and lower prices in an inelastic market (which agriculture personifies) is in creating changes in the supply situation.

Demand tends to be fixed but supply can change. These changes can come because of the unpredictable production or by concerted group action. Agricultural producers have consistently avoided these group actions whether conducted by government or by groups of agricultural producers. Since freedom is to be respected there must be respect of this decision. The concern is that group action is avoided in the name of independence when, in fact, independence is a myth. We must see the choice as the choice of freedom.

The reason all this is relevant is two-fold. First, grain prices are very low with no early prospect for remedy. Second, we observe most of society attempting to professionalize each special occupation, first in the name of professionalism and second in the name of supply control.

Granted agriculture is different, and granted agricultural production is a combination of skill, art, knowledge, and business, it's still possible that group activities could have tremendous power toward price and profit.

The purpose of this treatise is not to suggest which is right or wrong, but rather to make the point that for clarity of thinking there is a difference between independence and freedom and the concept that farmers have exercised over the years is freedom.

Where The Money Is

"Need proof that your working days are over if you make it big as a politician?" asks columnist Bob Johnson in the Wadena Pioneer-Journal. Then he points out the following to prove his point:

U.S. News and World Report said in its May 30 issue that Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas made $135,000 in 1982 just from speeches. Minnesota's own Dave Durenberger coined $60,700 last year from the same efforts.

On the other side of the political aisle, the magazine reports Walter Mondale earned $556,000 without going to the office. He gets $150,355 in salary from a law firm while he tours the country, picks up another $134,940 as a director for Control Data and Columbia Pictures, another $132,950 from speeches and a lifetime federal pension of $31,000 a year.

Merit Pay A Solution

Following editorial is from the Pope County Tribune:

The idea of merit pay for teachers has to be placed in its proper context.

If you listen to President Reagan and others, you would be led to believe that merit pay is the panacea to correct our educational problems. Actually, it's just one of several approaches that have to be taken is this nation is to correct the alarming deterioration of our educational system.

The tribune believes in the concept of merit pay, despite the strong objections of the Minnesota Educational Association and the National Education Association. The current system of teacher salaries lumps the good, bad and indifferent teachers under the same pay umbrella. It takes away all incentive for excellence in teaching and encourages and produces mediocrity, and anyone who says that it doesn't isn't being realistic.

The current pay system forces all teachers into a "lock step" type of situation that is almost identical to union pay scales which are based solely on seniority. This type of pay system may be just fine for the assembly line at a GM plant in Detroit, but it has little relevence in a classroom where the minds of students are the end product, not gleaming new automobiles.

The MEA and NEA oppose merit pay because they claim it pits teacher against teacher, aids a few at the expense of the majority and is virtually impossible to come up with a fair and impartial system of evaluating individual teachers.

There is a lot of merit to this argument, but we submit that the present system has proved to be a dismal failure, and little is to be lost by trying another approach. Certainly, the personal likes and dislikes of the evaluators are going to come into play, but this system of evaluation has been going on in the private business sector for years, not to mention the armed forces, and it hasn't seemed to hamper either private industry or the military.

Donald C. Hill, president of the MEA, says there is a "groundswell of opposition" to the idea of merit pay, but the groundswell must be coming from MEA and NEA members because the majority of the American public seems to be solidly in favor of merit pay.

While we believe that merit pay should be instituted, we also believe that it is but one step needed to get our system of public education back on track.

The nation is going to have to raise educational standards in training teachers, increase teacher salaries in general, reinstate classroom discipline, stress educational "basics" more than at the present and hold students back until they have shown the ability to at least read and write. Longer school days and longer school years have also been suggested as essential.

What it all boils down to is more cooperation between schools and teacher groups and the public and especially parents plus more money from federal, state and local governments.

It took us a long time to get into the current education mess and it's going to take a long time to extricate ourselves from the problem. It's going to take time, money, understanding and cooperation. We happen to believe that it can be done.

Borrowed Nonsense:

Isn't 1983 amazing? Who would have ever believed that the economy, the stock market, the Hitler diaries and the Jedi would all come back in the same year?

Sign posted in a California school: "In case of earthquake, the Supreme Court ruling against prayer in school will be temporarily suspended."

Physician: "Because my patients rarely get me out of bed in the middle of the night, they seldom die and they never get well."

Wheat Farmers Forced To Idle Many Acres

American wheat farmers will be forced to idle another four million acres to offset U.S. government mismanagement of Chinese textile negotiations, according to Don Loeslie of Warren, president of the National Association of Wheat Growers.

Four million acres is 10 times the combined size of Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York City and Washington, D.C., Loeslie pointed out.

"The United States has lost over $350 million in wheat trade in 1983 in an attempt to satisfy domestic textile interests," stated Leslie. "This means lower wheat priced, reduced export earnings and a bigger burden for domestic farm programs.

"It's unbelievable," he said, "that this is happening at the same time the agriculture department is pushing Congress to cut farm income by freezing target prices in 1984 and 1985."

The U.S. embassy in Peking recently reported that agricultural exports to China dropped 80 per cent during the month of April, to $30.1 million from $151.5 million a year ago. Total U.S. trade with China is off by more than 75 per cent compared to the first four months of 1982.

"It's costing a lot to keep Chinese textile exports out of this country," stated Harrell Ridley, chairman of U.S. Wheat associates, the wheat farmers' foreign marketing organization. The Chinese have been the United States' biggest wheat customer, annually buying over eight million tons worth about $1.3 billion. According to Ridley, who farms at Las Animas, CO, there have been no Chinese purchses of U.S. wheat this year.

Loeslie and Ridley both predicted that the substantial wheat sales losses to China would undermine U.S. wheat markets this harvest season and negate many of the preceived benefits of the USDA's PIK program. They also said that the government's handling of China trade would "erode market development accomplishments" of U.S. wheat farmers in China.

MN Conducts Annual Gypsy Moth Survey

Minnesota's annual gypsy moth survey and detection trapping program is being doubled this year in a cooperative expansion and intensification of the campaign to prevent establishment of the nation's most serious tree defoliating insect in this state, according to agriculture commissioner Jim Nichols.

Placement of up to 10,000 special gypsy moth detection traps began this past week in the southeastern two thirds of the state by a team of employees and volunteers representing the Minnesota and U.S. departments of agriculture, Minnesota department of natural resources, and the national campers and hikers association.

Public cooperation is requested to insure that the traps are not disturbed. The traps are small, brown waxed cardboard triangular containers, baited with a tiny strip of plastic impregnated with the scent of the female gypsy moth which will attract the male moths. The inside of the trap is coated with a sticky material to capture the flying male moths.

The trapping program, now in its eleventh year, has been successful thus far in identifying potential and actual gypsy moth infestations. This was used as the base data for the earlier spring aerial pesticide applications to St. Paul and Woodbury areas in a gypsy moth eradication campaign.

Multiple catches of male gypsy moths in two successive years in any location are indicative of an infestation. This year special trapping emphasis will be focused in the St. Anthony and Lake Harriet areas of metropolitan Hennepin county, and at Rochester in Olmsted county, where multiple trappings were recorded last year.

Gypsy moths are hitch hikers, and prolific reproducers. The northeastern United States has been infested increasingly since the pest was accidentally introduced into Massachusetts in 1869. The moth has spread westward by secreting its egg masses on outdoor recreational equipment, campers, trailers, patio furniture, boat covers, even on bikes, motorcycles and mobile homes. Each egg mass, smaller than a nickel, contains up to 500 gypsy moth eggs. These are winter hardy, even in Minnesota, experience has proven.

Runestone Is Attraction At Alexandria

A nationally-syndicated columnist once wrote that "to the people of Alexandria, Minnesota, Columbus is just another town in Ohio." The reference was obviously toward the famous Kensington Runestone which resides as Alexandria's pride and joy in the Runestone museum there.

The Runestone, of which most Minnesotans are aware by now, is believed to be an authentic written (or carved) record of a Viking exploration team in northwestern Minnesota in 1362 — nearly a century and a half before Columbus' first voyage to the new world.

Although total agreement on its authenticity has yet to come, the enigmatic rock is certainly not the only relic the Vikings left in Minnesota. Scholars generally acknowledge that Nordic seamen made regular visits to this country long before 1492.

Viking artifacts — swords, halberd axes and altar stones — have turned up in impressive numbers in northwestern Minnesota. Along with the Runestone, many of these are on display in the Alexandria museum. Visitors to the museum are also treated to extensive wildlife displays, artifacts dating back to both the Spanish American War and World Wars I and II, a wide array of Indian artifacts and an early 1900's doctor's office display.

Outside of the museum is a one-room schoolhouse, a log church, and a building with a collection of horsedrawn equipment and tractors representative of various historical times.

But the runestone, a tablet which weighs some 202 pounds, is the star of the show. Looking at it imparts a small shiver to the spine and it becomes difficult to remain unconvinced of its authenticity.

Minnesotans always give Columbus his due; his was a brave, inspired journey which revitalized an apathetic, ingrown European commerce.

But Minnesotans also have this little picture in their minds of helmeted warriors, sailing their sea dragons west through Hudson Bay to northwest Minnesota.

The Kinsington Runestone museum is open seven days a week from June to October. Adult admission is $2.25; children 11 to 17, $1.00; children less than 10, free; senior citizens, $1.75.

Travel Center Informs About Vacation Spots

Start planning your summer vacation with a visit or a phone call to the state of Minnesota travel information center, suggests the Minnesota tourism division.

You'll find a travel counselor on hand with free literature on any kind of vacation you're looking forward to taking with a range of accommodations, travel destinations, activities and recreational possibilities for a day, weekend or two-week vacation.

There's lots of literature about favorite vacation spots along with camping guides, houseboat guides and lodging guides for motels, hotels, motor inns and resorts. Ask for a state highway map, too.

It's all free for the asking. The Minnesota travel information center is located in the St. Paul skyway system at 240 Bremer Building, 419 N. Robert Street, St. Paul, and is open Monday through Friday between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. There's a browsing area where visitors can pick and choose the literature they want. Requests can be taken by phone any weekday. In Minnesota, outside the Minneapolis-St. Paul metro area, call toll-free 1-800-652-9747.

Here are some suggestions on how to use the center. First, request information on the specific destination if you can. The travel information center breaks up Minnesota into six tourism regions (Metroland (Twin Cities area); Hiawathaland (southeastern Minnesota); Arrowhead (northeastern Minnesota); Pioneerland (southwestern Minnesota); Vikingland (northwestern Minnesota); and Heartland (which runs north to south through the center of the state). Each of these regions prepares a brochure of its own. In addition, cities and resort areas have their own publications that are free for the asking.

The State of Minnesota publishes calendar information throughout the year. A "Spring-Summer Calendar of Events" will direct you to over 600 summer festivities around the state. Old-time centennial celebrations, running marathons, fishing derbies, boat and car racing, and festivals featuring music, art, theater and folk dancing are held from April through August.

Discover Minnesota's forests and parks through the "Canoeing, Hiking and Backpacking" brochure. This comprehensive river and trail guide gives names, locations, brief descriptions and information sources for more than 3,000 miles of foot trails and over 33 canoeable rivers in the state's only national park, Voyageurs, two national forests, 64 state parks and 55 state forests.

For novice fishermen, "Fishing In Minnesota" explains what type of fish can be found in the state and generally when and where to find them. There are fishing tips and a section on fishing Lake Superior. If you want to fish this vacation, it will give you some good suggestions on where to go to catch your limit.

Roadside attractions abound through the prairie, rolling farmland, pine forests, river valleys and wooded bluffs. "Minnesota Minnetours" directs you to 12 loop driving tours highlighting different parts of the state. The areas selected for the tours are especially rich in historical, natural and recreational activities. Additional brochures provide more detail on the state's historic sites.

You'll want to make plans for your accommodations early so ask for the hotel and motor hotel, motel, resort or campground guide. Each brochure offers descriptions and telephone numbers to help you find whatever suits your needs.

This is just a sampling of the information provided free by the Minnesota travel information center.

Call 1-800-652-9747 or write the Minnesota Travel Information Center, 240 Bremer Building, 419 North Robert Street, St. Paul, MN 55101.

Naming Driver Before Party Is Suggested

Designated drivers are one of the best ways to prevent alcohol-related traffic accidents, according to the Minnesota safety council.

"Most people don't consider alternative means of transportation if the person who drove to a party or a bar becomes intoxicated," said John A. Woodhall, chairman of the board of the Minnesota safety council. "Those who have had too much to drink don't give up their keys easily, and they don't always respond to logic."

The designated driver program, he said, can help avoid a dangerous and embarrassing situation. Here is how it works: One person from the group is selected in advance to serve as the designated driver. This individual refrains from drinking alcoholic beverages and is responsible for driving everyone home safely after the festivities. At the next party or outing, another person is selected to assume this responsibility. Responsibility simply rotates and safety is provided for everyong.

"Program is advocated by the National Safety Council and other organizations interested in preventing alcohol-related traffic accidents because it works," said Woodhall. "It's been successful in European countries for years. In Sweden and the United Kingdom, for example, designated drivers often place their car keys in their empty beverage glasses so that hosts will not encourage them to drink alcohol."

According to statistics, alcohol is a factor in over half of all fatal motor vehicle accidents. Traffic accidents killed 578 Minnesotans last year.

Chief's Corner

-by Ken Froschheiser
Chief of Police
Thief River Falls, MN.

Some citizens have asked about the recent bicycle violations reported in the court dispositions. The police department is taking a serious approach to bicycle violations. Bicycle traffic is probably one of the largest safety hazards on our streets during this time of year.

Officers of the department have been instructed to issue citations on bike violations. Most violations are common-type mistakes with no thought of what the hazards may be. Officers report that running stop signs and riding on the wrong side of the street are the most common violations. All bicyclists should remember that the same traffic laws that apply to a motor vehicle are also applicable to bicyclists.

On July 13 at 10 a.m. Juvenile Officer Haugen, with assistance from other officers of the department, will be offering a bicycle-riding safety course behind the Law Enforcement Center. The program is being sponsored by Pepsi-Cola, and they are offering a 10 speed bike to be given away to one lucky participant. This program is designed to instruct and emphasize safe-riding habits. We hope that a lot of people will come for the program, and we ask all parents to encourage their children to participate. Adults are welcome to enter as well.

We would ask all citizens to ride their bikes in a safe manner. We don't want anyone seriously injured or killed in a bicycle accident where stopping for a sign or riding on the proper side of the street would have prevented the accident.

Legion Eyes Higher Finish

After an 0-4 start against Ninth District Class AA competition, the young Thief River Falls American Legion baseball team found itself facing the prospects of a last-place No. 6 tournament seed come playoff time the end of this month.

But with a 3-2 victory at East Grand Forks Thursday, Thief River Falls took a step in the right direction that could produce a much more favorable finish among the new Ninth District Class AA set-up with Moorhead, Crookston, Fergus Falls, Detroit Lakes, East Grand Forks and Thief River Falls.

Thief River Falls has four games left against Ninth District Class AA teams, all of them on the road at the end of the regular season schedule: Tuesday, July 19 — at Detroit Lakes; Thurs., July 21 — at Crookston; and Sat., July 23 — a doubleheader at Fergus Falls to end the schedule.

Moorhead will host the Ninth District Class AA tournament, a double-elimination affair, July 28-31.

It'll be tough for a young team to win on the road, but Thief River Falls could surprise a couple of those teams for a middle-of-the-pack finish going into the tournament, which could be a wide-open affair without a dominant team.

Thief River Falls is scheduled to play Tuesday at Karlstad before hosting Bemidji Thursday in a 6 p.m. doubleheader. A Thief River Falls high school rival in Region 8AA, Bemidji is grouped in the American Legion Sixth District.

Classy Softball Tournament

Not your ordinary beer-drinking Sunday invitational tournament, the annual MRPA-Dudley Classic men's slow pitch softball extravaganza at Brooklyn Center last week featured in the Minneapolis Star-Tribune and St. Paul Pioneer Press-Dispatch included a number of head-shaking highlights that should be of interest to the large softball-playing audience in the area.

A tournament like the MRPA-Dudley Classic is classy when six umpires are used for one game, when a 40-page program is printed and when a crowd estimated at 6,500 show up for a game.

Elite Coating of Athens, Georgia, the No. 1-rated team in the nation, won the tournament over Howards-Western Steer of Denver, North Carolina, the No. 3-rated team in the nation. Elite lost to Howards 19-15 in front of that 6,500 crowd in the winner's bracket of the double-elimination tournament, but came back to win three straight for the title, coming back from a 10-1 deficit to beat Howards 25-21 to set up a championship encounter they won 19-8.

For the tournament, Elite smashed 97 home runs over the 300-foot fences. Six different players hit 10 or more homers, with three sharing the tournament lead with 14 each. In one inning, Elite banged out 15 home runs before getting eight more the next frame for 37 round-trippers in a five-inning 58-7 victory.

No slouch offensively, either, Howards outscored its first two opponents 64-15 and three times during the tournament scored 32 runs.

Gary Hargis, manager for Elite, said no other tournament they attended throughout the country had as big a crowd other than the Smoky Mountain Classic. He called the Brooklyn Center diamonds more like a golf course than a softball field.

Miscellaneous

+ An eight-team Northern Intercollegiate Conference (NIC) football package is being planned Sunday, November 20, at the Metrodome in Minneapolis. Tentative match-ups for the day-long affair would feature Bemidji State vs. Augusburg; Winona State vs. University of Minnesota-Morris; Moorhead State vs. St. Cloud State; and the University of Minnesota-Duluth vs. St. John's. It's estimated that it would cost $15,000 for stadium rental and approximately that much more for ushers, ticket takers, officials and other expenses. All proceeds would go to the NIC, with tickets priced at $5 in advance and $7 on game day. The college event would be held one day after Prep Bowl II, the Minnesota State High School League state football championship spectacular that names winners in five classes.

Time Is Right For A Visit To Agassiz Refuge

Refuge manager Joe Kotok advises the public that the next two weeks is an excellent time for visitors to enjoy refuge wildlife. Possibilities exist for viewing moose calves, deer fawns, goslings, ducklings and a variety of other species. Probabilities for seeing them are highest during the early morning and late evening hours. Kotok recommends visitors bring binoculars and field guides.

Water conditions are excellent this spring as all pools are adequately recharged and conditions ideal for overwater nesting waterfowl. Annual breeding pair survey for ducks, completed in May, revealed over 4,900 pairs of dabbling ducks and 2,500 pairs of diving ducks in the area.

Nearly 400 goslings were counted on the refuge during the annual goose production survey on June 17.

Most visitors travel Marshall County 7 and the refuge auto tour route. Auto tour brochures and other information can be obtained from refuge headquarters located along County Road 7. The auto tour is open 7 days a week during daylight hours. Refuge office hours are Monday-Friday, 7:30 a.m. - 4 p.m.

WET WEATHER didn't put a stop to Wednesday's scheduled appearance in Thief River Falls of Eddie Feigner, "The King and His Court," softball team. A group of Thief River Falls fast pitch softball league all-stars faced the legendary Feigner. Series of Times photos at the event showed Feigner, protecting himself from the rain with his jacket, signing autographs (top left); Feigner receiving instructions from Dave Barnett before pitching blindfolded (top right); comic Gary West joking with the opposing pitcher Mike Drury (bottom left); and Feigner delivering one of his pitches to Howard Dalager (bottom right). A crowd of about 300 sat through the rain to watch the 45-minute program.

Eddie Feigner Makes TRF Appearance Wednesday . . .

Rain Greets King and His Court

Despite a day-long rain that continued throughout the 45-minute performance that night, the legendary Eddie Feigner, "The King and His Court," made a scheduled stop in Thief River Falls Wednesday for an 8 p.m. encounter with the Thief River Falls fast pitch softball league all-stars.

Sponsors here estimated a crowd of 300 was on hand for the exhibition, making it a successful venture, they say, in spite of the unfavorable weather which they felt undoubtedly cut the attendance down considerably.

"We very seldom get rained out," explained Feigner in a short conversation amid autograph-seekers afterwards. "People are funny; they'll sit in the rain to watch us. They want to see a show. It (the rain) can't help but hurt things, but we still try to put on a good show for the folks."

Feigner admitted the weather affects the performance. "You can't do everything in this kind of weather," he said. "We just try to put on the best show possible. It's really slippery out there — very dangerous, really. But we still did a lot of the stuff in our show."

However, missing was Eddie Feigner, Jr., the much-publicized all-round athlete with a string of seven consecutive 100-home run seasons. It was explained to the crowd that J.R. is recovering from knee surgery, cutting the regular four-man softball team down to three players. They recruited Darrell Stromlund off the Thief River Falls all-stars' roster to play shortstop for them — this giving Stromlund a chance to claim forever that he once was a member of "The King and His Court."

When it was all done, Feigner, catcher Gary West, first baseman Dave Barnett — and Stromlund — had themselves a 2-0 "victory," although it's more than obvious that the "final score" matters little. Emphasis is put on the entertainment, and little in the way of true fast pitch softball action takes place. In fact, the comic routines of West dominated the program and kept most fans' attention.

Howard Dalager, Mike Drury and Al Melvie of the Thief River Falls all-stars, though, can lay claim to getting "hits" of Feigner, when they managed to make contact and put the ball into the empty outfield.

Those news-making 104-mile-per-hour Feigner fast balls and fence-clearing home runs by his teammates never materialized Wednesday, but the crowd still seemed to enjoy it, satisfied with the knowledge they watched "The King and His Court."

Now 59 years old, Feigner has been touring the globe since 1946, and the Thief River Falls appearance will be added to the records that showed, coming into the 1983 season, that Feigner has pitched 7,341 games; struck out 112,388 batters; pitched 801 no-hitters and 227 perfect games; appeared in 3,743 cities worldwide, traveling some 3,110,550 miles to play in front of approximately 14,760,000 fans. Each team member, it's reported, averaged 2,500 at-bats each year.

Fishing Safety Tips Offered By Safety Council

Minnesota Safety Council says there's nothing fishy about taking basic safety precautions before dropping a line in your favorite fishing hole. Safety council offers a guide for the novice and a reminder for the experienced fisherman to give your next fish story a safe and happy ending.

Know how to swim and know basic first aid. Tell someone where you plan to fish, mentioning also when you plan to return. Take a friend along for company and for assistance in the event of emergencies.

Listen to weather forecasts and prepare accordingly.

Stow needle-nose pliers, wire cutters and a pocket knife in your tackle box. Remember to pack a simple first aid kit as well.

Avoid fishing in waters where there are swimmers or scuba divers. If you fish from a boat, carry a personal flotation device for every person aboard. Don't anchor your boat in channels or tie it up to a buoy — these are traffic lanes and must be kept clear.

If wading, watch for drop-offs into deep water and for unsteady rocks in fast running streams.

Should a hook snag you, cut it from the line, put a dressing on the injured area and get to a doctor.

Avoid drinking alcoholic beverages before driving your boat, especially on hot summer days. Heat from the sun magnifies the effects of alcohol, which is a significant factor in water fatalities.

KEY PLAY IN Friday's Thief River Falls-Karlstad American Legion baseball game developed in the second inning when Thief River Falls runner Kirk Jenson was ruled out, even though it appears he might well have beaten the tag of Karlstad third baseman Mark Chwialkowski. Trailing 2-0, Thief River Falls threatened in the second when Al Ness and Jenson led off with back-to-back singles. Ryan Drees moved both runners up on a sacrifice bunt and Steve Solheim walked to load the bases. Jeff Anderson's fly ball to medium-short center field appeared to be good for a sacrifice fly and a run, but pitcher Chris Olson cut off the throw to the infield by centerfielder Keven Larson and threw to Chwialkowski to get Jenson, trying to tag up from second to third on the play, for an inning-ending double play. To make matters worse, the third out came before Ness crossed the plate, leaving Thief River Falls scoreless instead of having a run in with a runner at third on the play.

Legion Splits Northwest League Games Against EGF, Karlstad

Thief River Falls received strong back-to-back pitching performances from Tim Nyland and Bob Huot, but wound up with different end results in American Legion baseball action.

Nyland pitched a three-hitter Thursday as Thief River Falls extended its winning streak to six games with a 3-2 victory at East Grand Forks.

Huot came back with a four-hitter Friday, but didn't get any offensive support as Thief River Falls lost an unexpected 2-0 decision to Karlstad, a team they beat 10-5 less than a week earlier in the Thief River Falls invitational tournament semifinals.

Those results — both Northwest League games — left Thief River Falls with an 11-5 season record, 3-3 in the Northwest League. Thief River Falls, scheduled to play in an invitational tournament in Winnipeg over the Fourth of July weekend, will have a quick rematch with a Tuesday trip to Karlstad and then host Bemidji Thursday in a 6 p.m. doubleheader.

Packing six wins within a six-day span, Thief River Falls was a 3-2 winner at East Grand Forks Thursday with a seventh inning run that made amends for a 7-1 loss at the hands of East Grand Forks one week earlier — the last Thief River Falls defeat.

Tied 2-2 going into the seventh, Thief River Falls scored when Bob Huot, the No. 9 batter in the line-up, drew a lead-off, full-count walk. Tim Nyland moved him to second with a sacrifice bunt. Two wild pitches later he scored.

Thief River Falls had scored single runs in the third and fourth, with a hit-batsman (Gary Cornell) and an error plating the first run, while consecutive two-out singles by Ryan Drees, Cornell and Huot producing the second run.

A two-run single by Rich Loomis tied it with one out in the bottom of the sixth.

Chris Olson and Keven Larson hit solo home runs in the first inning and as it turned out, that was the only offense either side produced in a quick 1-hour, 22-minute 2-0 Karlstad victory Friday on the Thief River Falls fairgrounds diamond.

Olson, the game's first batter, sent a full-count pitch over the right-center field fence. One out later, Larson put an 0-1 delivery over the left-center field fence.

Rest of the night was a pitching duel between Thief River Falls' Bob Huot and Olson. Huot surrendered just two hits the rest of the way. Olson scattered six singles.

While the outcome might have been unexpected, Karlstad coach Dan Clark wasn't surprised by the score, the home runs or the pitching job by Olson. Afterall, Karlstad, now 6-3, beat Crookston 7-1 the previous night, getting revenge against lefthander Craig Stahlecker, who no-hit them 10-0 the week before; Karlstad has eight home runs as a team this summer; and Olson two-hit Roseau in his last start, a 7-4 victory Monday.

"We're real happy with the win," acknowledged Clark. "They (TRF) might have taken us a little lightly. They have an excellent team; make no mistake about it, but we played well. The kids have a good attitude; they play heads-up baseball; they're always taking it up; they have fun.

Thief River Falls coach Nick Drees confirmed that his club might have been a little flat.

"Obviously they weren't ready to play," he said. "You've got to be ready to play all the time, whether it be against Karlstad or Moorhead. They (Karlstad) have a nice ball club, take nothing away from them."

Drees was more than satisfied with the pitching of Huot, who hasn't gotten that many mound assignments. "Bob threw a good game. He had two bad pitches that first inning is all. But if you don't score runs you don't win many games," he explained.

— Babe Ruth Baseball —

Thief River Falls Babe Ruth A baseball team for 13-15-year-olds improved its 1983 season record to 10-6 Monday with a doubleheader sweep over Roseau, 4-1 and 4-2.

In the opener, Jeff Anderson pitched a two-hitter, striking out 10. He did not walk a batter. Thief River Falls scored three times in the third on a two-run single by Lee Hamre and an error. Tom Knoff led off the sixth with a double and later scored the final run for the winners, who made the most of four hits.

In the nightcap, Quincy Lofberg, Marty Levin and Dan Iverson all had two hits each and accounted for six of the winners' eight hits. Thief River Falls led 4-0 through 5½ innings. Iverson was the winning pitcher, scattering six hits.

Meanwhile, the Thief River Falls Babe Ruth B team split a Tuesday doubleheader with Red Lake Falls, losing 6-5 and winning 4-2 for a 4-2 season record.

Red Lake Falls used nine hits and seven walks to win the opener, limiting Thief River Falls to just four hits.

In the second game, Scott Novak was 3-for-3 and Al Sorum was 2-for-3 in a Thief River Falls victory. Both sides had six base hits, but Thief River Falls won it by scoring four times in the second inning on two walks, an error and back-to-back singles by Novak and Sorum.

No scores were received on the Thief River Falls Prep team for 13-year-olds, a doubleheader winner over Crookston Tuesday and Red Lake Falls Wednesday for an impressive 15-1 record.

Boating Safety Is Stressed By Safety Council

In Minnesota, summer weekends mean taking advantage of recreational activities on our 10,000 lakes. Minnesota Safety Council has some tips on safe boating for those busy weekends, and for the entire boating season:

1. Check and heed weather forecasts before departing on a boat trip. Advise a friend or relative staying ashore of your travel plans.

2. Carry spare parts for your boat. A shear pin for the propeller, a drive belt for the generator, extra spark plugs and a tool kit are essential.

3. Make sure your passengers know where the livesaving equipment is and how to use it before you leave the dock. Warn them against riding on the gunwales. Also make sure a second member of your group can operate the craft in case something should happen to you.

4. Carry one wearable PFD (personal flotation device) for each person on board a 16-foot or longer boat, plus one throwable PFD. Boats less than 16 feet long and all kayaks and canoes must have one wearable or throwable PFD for each person on board. All PFDs must be Coast Guard approved.

5. Learn nautical rules so you know who has the right of way and how to pass other boats.

6. Remember to put out enough line when anchoring your boat. A ratio of seven feet of line to each foot of water is recommended.

7. Follow safe fueling procedures. Do not fill the tank to the top as gasoline expands in hot sun and will overflow through the vents.

8. Drive your boat under control, avoiding high speed and sharp turns. You can be held legally liable for damage caused by your wake.

9. Match the speed of your boat to sea conditions if you are trapped in high wind and rough water. Let the boat's bow ride to meet the wave rather than driving into it. If the pounding is too much, start running a zigzag course, quartering the wave. Passengers should sit low in the boat as you head for the nearest shelter on shore.

10. Beware of swimmers. Continually scan the water ahead of your boat for things in the water, and never drive close to an anchored or drifting boat. There may be swimmers near it.

11. Signal for emergency help by raising and lowering your outstretched arms slowly and repeatedly. Hold a brightly colored object in each hand.

Minnesota Safety Council has a free pamphlet on boating safety. To obtain a copy, send a self-addressed, stamped business size envelope to the safety council at 555 Wabasha Street, Suite 102, St. Paul, MN 55102.

— Men's Fast Pitch —

Schmidts-Coca Cola swept a pair of Thief River Falls men's fast pitch softball league games from Melvies Friday night, 9-3 and 5-0.

Melvies had a 2-1 lead in the first game going into the seventh inning, but with two out Mark Harder drew a walk, stole second and advanced to third on a wild pitch. Nick Drees picked out a 2-2 offering and slapped it into left field for the tying run.

Schmidts-Coke used three walks, three errors, a bunt single and Walker's three-run homer in the top of the eighth to score seven runs.

Melvies got a run back in the last of the frame for the final 9-3 tally. Mark DuChamp recorded seven strike-outs in picking up the win. Rick Kolstad suffered the loss.

Mike Drury's one-hit, eight-strikeout shutout gave Schmidts-Coke its second win.

The winners got the only run they needed in the bottom of the first on Mark Lundin's single, Drury's sacrifice bunt, a steal of third and a wild pitch. The winners added a run in the third and used three singles and a Melvies error to score three more in the fifth.

Dave Geatz got the lone Melvies hit, a two-out single to left in the fourth. Leroy Christenson took the loss.

Melvies had a double play in the first game and turned the trick twice in the second contest.

Thanks to sportsman-supported management programs there are now some 15 million white-tailed deer in the United States, compared with only 500,000 in 1900.

Underground Mine Tour Is Park Feature

Unique among the state parks, recreational areas, waysides and monuments comprising Minnesota's state park system, Tower-Soudan state park affords tourists the opportunity to travel 2,341 feet beneath the earth's surface, 1,400 feet below sea level, and to be transported through an underground mine.

The park is located on a 982-acre site on the beautiful shores of Lake Vermilion, two miles north of Tower, and a half-mile north of Soudan, on highway 169.

Visitors, accompanied by guides, are lowered by a cage or elevator, to the 27th level of the oldest and deepest underground mine in Minnesota where the temperature is always near 50 degrees. After the three-minute descent, tourists ride by rail through a 3,000-foot tunnel carved from solid rock to a circular stairway. This leads to a large area called a stope, where ore was mined by the famed underground miners of the Vermilion range.

There is also a surface tour that offers a view of the open pits and their wondrous depths, visits to the engine house, crusher building, drill shop and a spacious visitors' center. Tickets for the one-hour narrated mine tour, an attraction unique to the U.S., are $3 (adults), $1.50 (under 17). The first tour leaves at 9 a.m. and the last tour leaves at 4 p.m.

Tower-Soudan state park features a picnic area with beautiful pines and boat access to Lake Vermilion. Campgrounds are in nearby Bear Head lake state park, eight miles off highway 169 between Soudan and Ely and in township parks in Tower and Soudan. (Within a 25-mile radius there are some 16 campgrounds.)

The historic Soudan mine was discovered in 1883 but did not become an underground mine until 1890. From 1882 until 1890, it was an open-pit operation. When it was closed in 1962, the Oliver Iron mining division of the U.S. Steel company — at the request of the Tower-Soudan development council — donated the entire mine operation to the state of Minnesota. On July 31, 1984 Tower-Soudan will mark the 100-year anniversary of the first iron ore shipment from a Minnesota mine with a special centennial celebration.

Tower-Soudan state park, with its underground mine, is truly unique among Minnesota's fine state parks, and an attraction not to be missed when you are in the Arrowhead country.

July Regatta Series Planned

Area sailing enthusiasts have the opportunity to match skills with their peers when Bemidji State University and the Lake Bemidji Sailing Club sponsor a July regatta series.

Races, totaling three each Sunday from July 10 to July 31 that the weather permits, begin at 1 p.m. at the BSU waterfront.

There is no cost to participate in the series, which is an excellent way to prepare for the annual Green and White Regatta scheduled for August 7.

For more information on the July regatta series, contact Leslie Wilkinson, Outdoor Program Center, Hobson Memorial Union, Bemidji State University, Bemidji, MN 56601, telephone 755-2999.

BOB HUOT pitched a strong four-hitter Friday, but still was the loser as Thief River Falls dropped a 2-0 Northwest League, American Legion baseball game to Karlstad. First inning home runs by Chris Olson and Kevin Larson did it for the visitors.

DNR hotline

1. How are we spending the trout stamp money and are any of these funds being spent in the Northwest Region?

Anticipated receipts for the first year trout stamp sales is around $100,000. Twenty-five thousand dollars is earmarked to hire a person to coordinate trout stream habitat improvement projects statewide.

Trout stamp funds are being spent in the northwest region. This summer, fisheries crews will be working on the Straight River and Kabekona Creek in Hubbard County and the Clearwater River near Pinewood. Stanley Daley, Regional Fisheries Supervisor.

2. What is the opening date of fishing season for next year? What happens when the 15th falls within the week — does it open the prior Saturday or the Saturday following the 15th?

Opening of fishing season is always the Saturday closest to the 15th of May. Byron Dyrland, Regional Enforcement Supervisor.

3. Is there any truth in the fact that a good thunderstorm will kill mosquito larvae and knock the wings off of bulldogs (flies)?

I wish a good thunderstorm would kill mosquito larvae even though that would take the food out of the mouths of dragonflies, damselflies, water beetles and make some minnows look somewhere else for one of their food sources. This would help curb the population of biting adult mosquitoes. But if anything, a good thunderstorm leaves temporary pools where mosquito eggs have been laid ready to hatch on just such an occasion. Many such ideas get started and passed around; however, the enormous number of adult mosquitoes is proof that the young do survive thunderstorms all too well.

Bulldogs is not a familiar term to me, but during a storm, flying insects generally seek shelter on plants, the trunks of trees and other protected places, and unless they receive a direct hit by a hailstone, will seldom be seriously injured to have their wings knocked off. Dr. Harold Peters, Professor Emeritus, Bemidji State U.

4. Do you have a question, a complaint, or a suggestion regarding how your natural resources are managed?

DNR Hotline is your direct channel to a representative who will answer you, whether it concerns parks, fish, wildlife, forests, waters or minerals. Write: DNR "Hotline", 2115 Birchmont Beach Road NE, Bemidji, MN 56601.

School Board Proceedings

July 4, 1983
Regular Board Meeting
Ind. School Dist. No. 564
Thief River Falls, Minnesota
June 13, 1983

A Regular Board Meeting of Independent School District No. 564 was held at 8:00 p.m. on June 13, 1983 in the Board Room of the School District Service Center.

The following Board members were present: Arnt Aune, Archie Cameron, Myrtle Carlson, Hank Hallstrom, Larry McDowell, Greg Pribula, and Harry Sjulson. Also present was Robert Block, Superintendent.

Chairman Harry Sjulson called the meeting to order at 8:00 p.m. and Clerk Arnt Aune established that a quorum was present.

A motion was made by G. Pribula and seconded by H. Hallstrom to approve the Minutes of the May 17, 1983 Regular Board Meeting. Motion carried unanimously.

A motion was made by A. Aune and seconded by A. Cameron to approve the Minutes of the May 23, 1983 Regular Board Meeting. Motion carried unanimously.

Linda Hawkins and a number of concerned parents were present and discussed with the Board their concerns regarding the problems the district had with lice during the past school year. Their concerns dealt basically with follow-up procedures being used; the possibility of holding a clinic to inform parents on how to identify the problem; problems created from students being labeled or humiliated; and a suggestion of creating parent volunteer groups to aid with screening. Every effort will be made to work together to help solve the problems that arise in the future.

Refinancing Of Mortgage May Save Thousands

Given an opportunity to invest a few thousand dollars now and save tens of thousands of dollars later, most people would give the matter serious thought. If you are holding a mortgage assumed a year or two ago when interest rates were as high as 18 per cent, you have this opportunity to save dollars down the road.

Refinancing your high-interest mortgage now that interest rates are down to 13 per cent and lower may be advantageous, notes the Minnesota society of CPAs. Although it will not be cost free, over the life of the mortgage you can save thousands of dollars.

Federal housing administration estimates that as many as 40 per cent of its recent mortgage applications have come from homeowners who want to refinance mortgages. Federal home loan bank board, which keeps tabs on mortgages financed through the country's savings and loans, notes that the monthly value of loan closings for refinancing grew from $592 million in September 1982 to more than $2 billion in March 1983.

To decide if refinancing is worthwhile, calculate all the costs and savings you expect, both immediate and long-term. Before you go through this arithmetic, keep in mind it's only useful if you plan to live in your home for at least two or three years, say CPAs.

In general, refinancing is a smart financial move if the difference between your current interest rate and a new one amounts to two per cent or more. To be safe, CPAs and lenders recommend a spread of three percentage points.

Refinancing your mortgage actually means getting a new mortgage, CPAs point out. That's true even if you refinance with the same lender. Because it is new, you are subject to various closing fees — a new appraisal, title search or update, bank attorney charges, and often the expense of a new credit investigation — fees that could total between $300 and $900.

However, closing fees the second time around are usually lower. It should also be easier to convince your bank or lender to give you a new mortgage because you have an established paying record. In addition, a lender may be more willing to refinance because it will not have to tie up any new money on the deal.

It is likely that you will have to pay "points" when you refinance your mortgage. A point is one per cent of the amount of the money you are borrowing, paid to the lender at the start of the loan. Although lenders have no statutory right to charge points, most do so as a matter of course.

You'll probably be charged three or four points on the mortgage. So, if you are getting a $60,000 mortgage, you'll pay $1,800 or $2,400 upfront.

On top of that, you may have to pay a prepayment penalty on the balance of your original mortgage. That penalty is typically three or four per cent. So if you owe $58,000 on your original mortgage, your prepayment penalty could be $1,740 or $2,320.

Your total refinancing cost would then be between $3,840 and $5,620. But now figure out your savings. If you refinance your 30-year, $60,000 mortgage and reduce you interest rate from 18 per cent to 13 per cent, your monthly payments will fall from $904.25 to $663.72, a savings of $240.53 a month.

You could wipe out the total of your fees and penalties in 16 or 24 months. Naturally, your total savings will depend upon the size of your mortgage, and the difference between your old and new mortgage rates.

Refinancing your mortgage may also affect your tax planning, CPAs note. Naturally, interest paid on a mortgage is tax deductible so when you settle on the lower monthly payments, remember your interest deductions for future years will also be lower. Prepayment penalties and points are deductible the year you pay them.

Of course, you can shop around for a new mortgage just as you would shop around for any deal. Try to negotiate with your bank or other lender, CPAs suggest. You may be able to bargain away penalties and points if you take a new interest rate higher than the current rate but lower than the rate you are already paying.

When calculating the savings from refinancing a mortgage, do not overlook how much interest you could have earned on an investment of what you spend on fees and penalties. Then decide if the deal is worthwhile; chances are refinancing will be the way to go.

Lay Advocates For Psychiatric Patients Starts

When psychiatric patients complain, the system doesn't always listen, says Bill Johnson, manager of the Lay Advocates Network. Johnson hopes his new statewide network of advocates will help to change that.

"It's a unique effort to give mental health consumers in Minnesota a voice in what happens to them while they're in treatment settings," Johnson says.

Funded by the McKnight foundation, the network is a special project of the Mental Health association of Minnesota. "We saw a need for such a service," said association executive director George Carr recently, "and since advocacy is at the core or our organizational mission, we're excited to be providing this type of direct service."

The network will make advocates available to any current or former psychiatric consumer who needs help with a complaint. Complaints may fall under a variety of headings, including treatment rights, public benefits rights, and employment and housing discrimination issues.

The project includes four staff "field advocates" — one each in Bemidji, Duluth, St. Cloud and Rochester. The name of the project tells what it is, says Johnson. "The field advocates do the networking. They also take advocacy cases; but they are really out there to establish a network of advocates who will be ordinary citizens trained in advocacy techniques."

Johnson believes the most feasible way to reach clients who are spread out all over Minnesota is to use volunteers. By 1985 the network hopes to have at least 200 trained advocate volunteers throughout Minnesota. Not just anyone, however, can become a volunteer advocate; prospective volunteers will have to fill out an application just as they would for any job.

"We have high standards," says Johnson, "because we think our clients deserve dedicated people to advocate for them." Johnson also notes that volunteers will be paid a small stipend to help defray personal expenses during their activities with the network.

Many of the client complaints are received on a tollfree number at the Mental Health association office in Bloomington. Some calls are referrals from other agencies, and in those cases, the network staff must contact the prospective client for permission to be involved. But most calls are from the individual clients. "Our clients tell us what the problem is, and once we substantiate the complaint, one of our advocates represents the client," Johnson says.

When a client needs an advocate, network staff locate one who lives near the client. "At least that's the ideal situation," says Johnson. Until volunteers are trained and available in all areas, the staff advocates will take most cases. "Our first priority is to speak in behalf of our clients, but we hope that linking clients with volunteers from communities will also make people more aware of some of the issues mental health consumers face. Many of the issues are directly related to the isolation and alienation that seem to be so common among our clients."

Johnson believes patients and ex-patients need a statewide advocacy program. Each state hospital has an advocate on staff, and there is an ombudsman program for nursing home residents, but until now there were no advocates to represent patients of other public treatment centers and private psychiatric hospitals. Johnson thinks the Mental Health association is an appropriate organization to provide advocacy services because it is not a governmental agency.

"If you have a grievance with the same system you work for, then ultimately your loyalty is to your job and not your client," he said. The bottom line of the Network, Johnson says, is "we can advocate for reasonableness and fairness for our clients without fear of losing our jobs in the process; we are really accountable to the clients we serve."

Pakistan May Provide Market For Soy Meal

Pakistan has lifted a major trade barrier to American farm exports, according to Congressman Arlan Stangeland.

Up to 200,000 metric tons of American soybean meal could be sold to Pakistan by 1986, because that country has dropped a 30 per cent import fee on soymeal imports.

"At an average price of $200 per metric ton, this could mean a new $40 million market for our farmers;" Congressman Stangeland said.

In April, Stangeland wrote to President Reagan, asking that future U.S. foreign aid to Pakistan be linked to that country's trade policies. "I was also upset that state department officials were interfering with USDA efforts to tie U.S. aid to Pakistani trade cooperation," Congressman Stangeland said.

Expanded soymeal exports to Pakistan will help that country to expand its fledgling poultry industry and provide high-protein feed for Pakistan's marine aguaculture program.

The Pakistani import tariff had closed a potential market to U.S. farmers, who had worked to expand that country's soymeal consumption with grower-funded efforts. American Soybean association estimates that Pakistan's potential for market growth this year will be 20,000 to 50,000 metric tons.

Congressman Stangeland, a senior member of the House agriculture committee, said, "This is a positive step. If America is to function as the world's breadbasket, we must continue to fight against trade barriers which block U.S. food exports."

Tax Credit Allowed For Summer Camp

Working parents who send their children under age 15 to summer camp may be able to gain some tax relief through the child and disabled care tax credit, according to C.D. Switzer, director of the internal revenue service in Minnesota.

Credit allows qualifying persons to take a tax credit from 20 per cent to 30 per cent of the money spent on child care, depending on their adjusted gross income. Day and overnight camp expenses are considered deductible child care expenses, the IRS explains, but any portion spent for transportation to and from the camp cannot be included. Costs of educational expenses may be deductible if the amount is incidental and cannot be separated from the costs of caring for your child.

In 1982, the limit on work-related expenses qualifying or the credit was raised to $2,400 for one child and $4,800 for two or more children.

Here is how the credit works: A person with an adjusted gross income of $20,000, can deduct 25 per cent of the qualifying child care expenses. For example, if you send your 10-year-old to a summer camp that costs $700, you can claim a child care dredit of $175 (25 per cent of $700). Remember, tax credits save even more money than deductions because tax credits directly reduce your tax bill while deductions only lower your taxable income.

To qualify for the credit for the summer camp expenses, you must meet all of the regular requirements for the child and disabled dependent care credit:

+ Your child must be a qualifying dependent under 15, or not able to care for himself or herself.

+ You must be a working parent or a parents looking for work.

+ You must have income from work during the year.

+ You must keep up a home that you live in with one or more qualifying dependents.

+ If you are married at the end of the year, you generally must file a joint return to claim the credit.

+ If you are married living apart from your spouse, you may file a separate return and claim the child care credit if you meet certain requirements.

+ If you are divorced or separated, you generally may claim the credit if you had custody of the child for a longer time during the calendar year, and the child received more than half of his or her support from one or both parents.

Other deductible child care expenses include paying a day care center or babysitter to care for your child while you work. You can also claim the credit for the cost of having a preschool child in nursery school during the day.

For more information on this credit, order the free IRS publication 503, child and disabled dependent care, by calling the IRS at 291-1422 or toll-free, 1-800-424-1040. Trained people are on hand Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. to answer all your Federal tax questions.

Stumpf Objects To Surcharge On Businesses

State Senator LeRoy Stumpf of Plummer has criticized the 10 per cent surcharge to be charged small businesses on the state's federal unemployment debt as being "the most unfair method for reducing the effects of the recession by taxing small businesses which are responsible for creating most of the jobs in our state."

The 1983 Minnesota Legislature passed a measure this session conforming the state to the federal unemployment standards, and requiring the state to begin paying back the $20 to $25 million in interest accrued on the federal loan balance of $400 million borrowed from the government over the past few years to cover the state's growing debt in this account.

"Since the high unemployment levels in our state (250,000) jobless, 7.9 per cent in May) have been caused by the national recession, not by local and state factors, it seems reasonable to me that the U.S. Congress should also be somewhat responsible for bringing about economic recovery and not laying the blame for it at the doors of small business," Stumpf said.

The state of Minnesota, among others, has been forced by the federal government to pay off the interest payments or risk losing business tax credits and administrative unemployment funds needed to cover continuing high unemployment costs, Stumpf explained. The federal standards also prohibit the state from making payments from regular tax collections and from reducing employers' taxes due to the interest payment requirements.

"The amount of unemployment taxes assessed to employers is based on each company's record over the past 36 months," Stumpf continued. "Since over the past year, the state has experienced a higher unemployment rate (10 per cent) due largely to the national recession, the President and Congress have chosen to reduce inflation by sacrificing 12 million jobs nationwide, and creating an untenable unemployment fund debt for our state governments in the process.

"I am urging all residents living in the district to contact their Congressman and U.S. Senators asking them to eliminate this surcharge. It is nothing more than an indirect federal tax increase which unfairly burdens our small business community and prevents economic recovery."

Hill Says Merit Pay Is Poor Idea

By Donald C. Hill
President
Minnesota Education Association

Merit pay for teachers is a poor idea for public schools.

It would serve to violate the trust that needs to be built between the teacher and the student.

Teachers who advocate and serve as the consumer protectors of that special relationship between a student and teacher can ill afford to accept this scheme that is designed to satisfy some political demagogue. It interferes with the values the student and the teacher bring to the relationship between them.

No teacher should expect to get paid on the basis of performance of students. And, no student should be put under the extra pressure of performance that would affect the teacher's pay.

If merit pay is to be based on hours of work, number of assignments, extra activities, etc., then we already have it.

For the last two months, we've seen a parade of merit pay advocates emerge from every corner of the education, political and business communities.

The only advocates I've heard who actually practice what they preach on the subject of merit pay are direct sales, straight commission folks. And, the majority of those are in pyramid sales. Now — there's a thought. Have the schools use the good old free enterprise system of merit based on whom you recruit to do your job.

I've heard heads of corporations who are bound and determined to put their schemes of running corporations to work in the public schools.

Well, look, boys, there are few in the public school who expect to have the perks of the corporate merit system. Not many of the education employees live in the mansions in the community nor have the big boats that pack the marinas in every body of water from coast to coast.

We don't spend millions to change our logos. We don't have the option of multimillion-dollar mergers to wow our boards of directors.

And, how ludicrous for the president of the United States to evaluate the education system with a commission on excellence — and, then, read into its findings his personal biases, which are irrelevant and based on his "gut reaction."

"We aren't getting our money's worth from our public schools," he rails on.

Well, will merit pay insure that he will?

Pay the good ones more, so that they stay in teaching? That means pay the poor ones less? So, what are the poor ones supposed to do? Get better or quit?

No teacher would willingly accept the category of poor and thereby get paid less. How would such a teacher ever explain it to the students?

If there are teachers who are "just not doing their jobs," and if the proponents of merit pay think they can find them with a merit system, how can you justify paying them anything — or even allowing them to teach at all?

No. As much as I would like to believe the sincerity of some who advocate merit pay, I am positive that, for most, it is a quick fix for those who need quick, cheap answers.

The few actual proposals are full of holes and lack any real change. And speak mostly to demerit. So, while Ronald Reagan has put merit pay on the front pages, he never has paid his dues in the teachers' lounge. We've been struggling over this concept for a hundred years.

But, for me, the argument is not that I think the concept is unworkable, it is that I think it violates the trust that is a must between students and their teachers.

And, that trust is the essence of the motivation that is needed to coach a student. Without it, machines could do our jobs. And, they can't.

Traffic Deaths Took Big Drop For Teenagers

Traffic fatalities in Minnesota declined between 1981 and 1982, according to the latest statistics from the Minnesota department of public safety. Showing the greatest reduction in fatalities were 15-19 year olds with an almost 45 per cent decline in the number of traffic-related deaths from 1981 to 1982.

One of the reasons for this decline may be extra efforts that have been made in Minnesota over the past several years to increase traffic safety awareness among young people. Included in the list of Minnesota's youth safety educational efforts is a program which has gained national acclaim for its innovative and effective approach. Dubbed "The Control Factor," it directly involves young people in preventive traffic safety education by transforming them from students into classroom teachers.

Since its inception in 1981, "The Control Factor" has trained over 450 Minnesota high school students to present the three-day multi-media program which focuses on the single largest contributor to traffic deaths: drinking and driving. To date, "The Control Factor" has been presented in more than 100 schools throughout Minnesota, reaching an estimated 7,500 students.

"The message of this program is simple and clear," said Rex Morriss, who coordinates the program through the Minnesota safety council, Inc. "You don't have to drink, but if you do, the last think you should do is to get behind the wheel of a car." Through a wide variety of classroom activities and materials, instructors help students to better understand how dangerous drunk driving is and — perhaps more importantly — help them to learn specific ways in which to stop themselves and their friends from driving drunk. ...

I Am Old Glory

I Am Old Glory: For over 200 years I have been the banner of hope and freedom for generation after generation of Americans. Born amid the first flames of America's fight for freedom, I am the symbol of a country that has grown from a little group of thirteen colonies to a united nation of fifty sovereign states. Planted firmly on the high pinnacle of American Faith my gently fluttering folds have proved an inspiration to untold millions. They have looked upon me as a symbol of national unity. They have prayed that they and their fellow citizens might continue to enjoy the life, liberty and pursuit of happiness, which have been granted to every American as the heritage of free men. So long as men love liberty more than life itself; so long as they treasure the priceless privileges bought with the blood of our forefathers; so long as the principles of truth, justice and charity for all remain deeply rooted in human hearts, I shall continue to be the enduring banner of the United States of America.

BIG BANG at about 1:45 p.m. on Monday, July 4, almost completely destroyed the Robert Baker home, just east of St. Hilaire. Miraculously, five people in the house at the time of the explosion survived, with no injuries of a critical nature. Attributed to a malfunctioning propane gas water heater, the explosion completely blew the north wall of the house out, collapsing the roof on that end. In spite of the tremendous damage, the explosion apparently didn't make much noise, as Don Barth, who lives just across the highway, said he didn't hear anything unusual.

Explosion Blasts Home On July 4th

"We must have had the biggest bang in the country on the Fourth of July!" joked Bob Baker of St. Hilaire on Tuesday.

Although he only managed a feeble smile when he said it, the fact that he was able to maintain some sense of humor after having almost completely lost his home to an explosion on Monday afternoon, says something about the man's outlook on life. "We'll keep on living somehow," he added.

About a half hour before the explosion, Baker says he went to the basement of the house to investigate a malfunctioning propane gas water heater. He says he smelled gas at that time, and shut the water heater off. He then lowered an electric fan into the basement in an attempt to dissipate the accumulated gas. He says he waited about twenty minutes to a half-hour before he returned to the trap door in the bathroom, to check and see if the gas level had dropped to a level that would allow him to safely light the water heater again. The last thing he clearly remembers past that point was taking about two steps down the nearly vertical stairway into the basement.

He remembers a tremendous blast, but isn't really sure if he was blown out of the house, or if he fell into the basement and scrambled back out again. He thinks the latter more likely, since both of his knees hurt like he landed on them. The only thing he is sure of is that he ended up outside, on the north side of the building. The north side of the building was gone.

His wife, Lannette, who had been visiting with her mother in the kitchen, which was just off the bathroom on the north side of the house, appeared near him, and he went to cut the power switch to the house to prevent another explosion or danger from shorted electrical wires. His wife then took the car and went to the neighbors to call for help.

Elliot Baker was in the living room on the couch, playing video games with his grandfather Ed Gregory, who was visiting from Oklahoma City, OK. He recalled hearing the explosion, but noted that it wasn't a real loud noise, just kind of a "whump." He remembers that the television flew off the table, and that he ended up outside the house on the east side. At first he wasn't sure if he was blown out the window or if he jumped out after the explosion. He wasn't sure if there was one explosion or two. His grandfather also came out the east side of the house.

Mrs. Gregory was found in the kitchen, on the floor. She was experiencing chest pain, and the family attempted to find her purse which contained medicine for her heart condition.

Karen Young said that they were among the first people on the scene, and couldn't believe that anyone could have survived the explosion. St. Hilaire Fire Chief Don Appel stated that on arrival he immediately checked to see that the bottle gas tank was turned off and checked the electrical power. No fire was evident.

When the ambulance arrived, Mrs. Gregory and Mrs. Baker were transported to the hospital in Thief River Falls. Elliot noted that his mother had a nail in her leg

Barbara, 17, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Laidley of Thief River Falls and a 1983 graduate of Lincoln high school. She is five feet five inches tall, weighs 125 pounds, has blonde hair and hazel eyes. For her talent presentation at the pageant she will sing "You Can't Get a Man with a Gun" from the musical "Annie Get Your Gun".

She has taken both voice and piano lessons, was a homecoming attendant her senior year, participated in high school choirs for four years and was class vice president as a sophomore and junior. She had also been a cheerleader and volleyball player and was president of her church youth group.

St. Hilaire Centennial Fights Weather...Wins!

SEVEN MEMBERS of the Biskey family were graduates of the high school at St. Hilaire and were among the nine brothers and sisters attending the all school reunion Saturday during the St. Hilaire centennial. The reunion banquet was served in the national guard armory in Thief River Falls. Left to right are (seated) Robert Biskey, Tacoma, WA; Warren Biskey, Seattle, WA; George Biskey, Dahlonega, GA; and Ralph Biskey, McMinnville, OR; (standing) Mary Biskey Burdick, Salem, OR; Dorothy Biskey Picard, Red Lake Falls; Elaine Biskey Murphy, Redmond, WA; Marjorie Biskey Evans, Seattle, WA; and Bertha Biskey Anderson, Thief River Falls. All but Elaine and Marjorie were St. Hilaire high school graduates. Saturday was the first time the nine brothers and sisters had been together for about 20 years.

BEARD CONTEST winners at the St. Hilaire centennial celebration were selected in competition Saturday evening at the St. Hilaire school. Left to right the winners include, front row, Rev. Gary Moore, best groomed; Earl Fraser, longest; and Myles Koop, wildest; back row, Ron Anderson, best overall; Ricky Grandbois, best goatee and moustache; Dennis Taylor, best try; and Earl Hoefer, sexiest. Contest was sponsored by the St. Hilaire Lions club and trophies were awarded to the winners in each division.

Despite uncooperative weather which brought heavy rain, the city of St. Hilaire pulled off its 100th anniversary celebration Saturday, Sunday and Monday with a high level of participation. Crowds for the parade on Sunday and fireworks Monday night resulted in cars parked north of the city beyond the SAR 3 intersection and south for nearly half a mile.

Centennial chairman Bernard Huot praised committee members, residents of the community and those attending the events for contributing to the centennial's success. He said that all events were conducted in spite of the rain and wet grounds and that participants accepted the conditions and made the best of them. Sunday was without rain and permitted the 90-unit parade and other activities to be held on schedule.

Attendance at the all-school reunion and displays of antiques, photos and clippings at the school was registered from Iowa, California, Pennsylvania, North Dakota, Oregon, New York, Missouri, Michigan, Texas, Montana, Illinois, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Colorado, Idaho, Washington, Georgia, Kansas, Vermont, Utah, New Jersey, Alaska and West Germany, as well as Minnesota and several places in Canada.

James Gaven and Alyce Sevre were crowned centennial king and queen at special ceremonies Saturday evening in the St. Hilaire school gymnasium. Crowd was small due to the reunion dinner which was being conducted at the same time at the national guard armory in Thief River Falls.

Light drizzle early Saturday afternoon dampened the tractor pulling contest which had attracted about 40 tractors of 1945 and older vintage. The drizzle turned into a downpour just as the event was drawing to a close, but the three-wheeler races took place later in the day in a muddy free-for-all which left participants and officials as well as many of the spectators covered with St. Hilaire soil. (Tractor pull and three-wheeler race results are listed later in this article).

The all-school reunion resulted in more than 400 people being served, including the volunteers doing the serving for some 360 reunion participants. Special guests at the reunion are pictured elsewhere in this issue of the Times and included former teachers, superintendent's wife, early graduates and family groups. The Biskey family had nine brothers and sisters present, seven of whom graduated from the St. Hilaire high school and two from Thief River Falls after the St. Hilaire high school closed.

Also attending were the seven surviving Almquist children, five of whom graduated from St. Hilaire. They included Laura Durman, Pocatello, ID; Edna Carlson, East Grand Forks; Alton Almquist, Davis, CA; Woody Almquist, St. Hilaire; Olive Durman, Denver, CO; Basil Almquist, Cummings, ND; and Shirley Busse, Thief River Falls.

All four children of the Carl Prestby family who graduated from the St. Hilaire school — Edna, Floyd, Phillis and Lucille — were in attendance at the reunion as were four members of the Huff family — Robert, Hubert, Hazel and Florence.

Winners of the beard contest were selected in judging Saturday evening following the king and queen coronation. Awarded trophies were Ron Anderson, best overall; Rev. Gary Moore, best groomed; Dennis Taylor, best try; Ricky Grandbois, best goatee and moustache; Earl Fraser, longest; Myles Koop, wildest; and Earl Hoefer, sexiest.

Sunday's parade of 90 units was won by a float created by Sheri Boman and Julie Fraser, depicting the city of St. Hilaire. Second place went to the Goodridge Lions club and third place to the oldest residents float — Lizzie Brink and Bennie and Mildred Johnson, chauffeured by Kim Johnson. Kiddies parade was won by Nathan Scott with Keith and Wanda Peters second and Trudy and Trina Aaronson third.

Plummer won the women's six-team softball tournament Sunday with a 2-0 win over

Peder Engelstad Family History Is Reviewed

(Editor's Note: The reunion of descendants of Peder and Mathilde Engelstad, who settled southeast of Thief River Falls in 1883, attracted approximately 300 people here last weekend. Melvin Engelstad, youngest son of Peder and Mathilde, has written and published a history of the family in bound book form. At the request of the Times he has taken excerpts from the history, and they will appear in serial form over the next several issues of the Times. The first portion of the history begins below.)

On the day of the auction at Broberg, Peder's two new suits were stolen from an upstairs room. The sale had lasted until after midnight, and the theft was discovered by Mathilde the following morning. A cap, found near the place where the suits had been hanging, was taken by Peder to the "lensmann" (sheriff) in Hamar, who listened to the story and kept the cap for whatever value it might have as evidence in identifying the thief.

As Peder, quite disturbed about his lost wardrobe, was walking back to Broberg, he met a neighbor who lived three miles from Kjos — and this man was looking for his cap that he said had been lost at the auction! Peder immediately explained to him that such a cap as he described had been found and turned over to the "lensmann" so that it could be returned to the owner upon being claimed.

This neighbor was a tailor and a good judge of fine clothes, and the two missing suits were of superior quality and carefully tailored in preparation for the journey to America. These were thoughts that were in Peder's mind as he retraced his steps, so that he could be of all possible assistance to this gentleman in recovering his lost cap!

The sheriff immediately arrested the man on grounds of suspicion and instructed Deputy Anderson to take Peder with him and search this man's home premises. The suits, which had been hidden under the joists of the barn roof, were found by Deputy Anderson; then, back at the sheriff's office when confronted with the facts, the thief admitted his guilt and and a badly swollen knee. He said he was really scared when he saw the knee. She was held at the hospital until Tuesday afternoon.

All three of the men were checked for injuries, with Elliot having stepped on a nail. He and his father were taken to the hospital where they were treated and released. Both said they didn't really feel any pain until much later. They spent the night at the home of Wayne Kruse, a friend in St. Hilaire. Ed Gregory spent the night in a motel in Thief River Falls.

Carpenter Ed Walseth had been working on the house, and had just completed putting new siding on, installing new windows and roofing. Baker noted that he had been scheduled to install windows in a new front door on Tuesday. He noted that the door was now laying in two pieces on the front lawn. When Walseth arrived he was kidded good naturedly about not having used enough nails. The house had also just had many new improvements made to the inside. A new bathtub and a refrigerator lay outside on the north side of the house.

Baker says his insurance agent had told him the house would be covered by his policy, but he was still unsure about the contents. He said he wasn't sure what they would do next, but thought the quickest thing might be a trailer house. "I've already had a realtor approach me with an offer of one. Can you believe that?" he said.

"Whatever I get, you can bet it's not going to have a gas water heater," he said. "It's going to be electric. All electric."

Missing Man Found In River Last Monday

Body of a man missing since Friday, from the Crestview Rest Home in Thief River Falls, was found on Monday, floating in the Red Lake River just above the power dam.

In addition to farming, he operated a bull dozing business and a machine repair shop; and for many years, during the winter months, he logged at Northwest Angle and for the M and O Paper company.

He was a member of the Salol Lutheran church and served for a time on the Warroad Creamery board and the Farmers Union board of directors at Roseau.

Surviving are a brother, Clifford Mattson, Eagan, five sisters: Mrs. Nell Marie Korshak and Mrs. Joe (Lillian) Zimmer, both of Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Elmer (Anna) Strandlund, Roseau; Ida Mattson, Salol; and Mrs. Spray of this city; a sister-in-law, Mrs. Helge Mattson, Minneapolis; nine nieces and nephews, including Mrs. Rick (Vivian) Contos and Mrs. Richard (Judy) Malby, both of this city; and several grand-nieces and nephews.

He was preceded in death by his parents, three brothers and a nephew.

MANY MEMORIES were stirred by old photographs and clippings on display in the St. Hilaire school building during that city's centennial observance on Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Many visitors on Saturday were former students at the St. Hilaire school who were there to register for the all-school reunion.

Homes Utilize Superinsulation

Superinsulated house of the 1980's promises to be a superstar in the homebuilding industry, according to the Minnesota department of energy, planning and development.

Although it looks like almost any conventionally built home, a superinsulated house may be Minnesota's chance to enjoy mid-summer-like comfort in the throes of winter without high heating bills. Superinsulated houses are designed especially for cold northern climates, with extra tight construction.

Superinsulated walls are insulated to R-30 or more, ceilings to R-60 or more, with draft-proof air-vapor barriers. Conventional homes are built with only R-12 walls and R-19 ceilings. Heating and cooling most of the superinsulated homes occupied today typically cost their owners $100 a year or less. Conventional furnaces and central air are not needed in many cases.

Superinsulated homes usually rely on heat given off by the occupants, home appliances and by solar energy collected through south-facing windows. Homes have small supplementary room heaters and possibly a small room air-conditioner. In a 1,500 sq. ft. superinsulated home, for example, the total supplementary heat needed during the coldest day of the year is from 10,000 to 20,000 Btu per hour compared to 80,000 Btu per hour in a conventionally built home of the same size.

"Several hundred superinsulated homes have been built in Minnesota since 1977," says Bruce Nelson, senior engineer with the department of energy, planning and development (DEPD), "and many builders in the state now offer superinsulation designs. The homes have many advantages-builders use readily available materials, with only slightly different construction techniques. Homeowners also can choose a house design that best suits their needs."

A typical superinsulated home has at least 12 inches of wall insulation, 19 inches of ceiling insulation and four inches of basement wall insulation. Airtight air-vapor barriers are made of six mil thick polyethylene sheeting with all the seam joints sealed shut. Windows have triple or quadruple glazing.

Because superinsulated homes are airtight, a ventilation system is necessary to prevent the buildup of moisture, odors and other air pollutants. Through use of a heat exchanger, stale indoor air is exhausted from the home while dry, fresh outdoor air is brought in. In most homes, this process occurs haphazardly through the many holes and cracks in the exterior of the house, causing a large amount of heat loss.

On a cold winter day, the heat exchanger uses warm, moist 70 degree Fahrenheit exhaust air to heat cold 0 degree Fahrenheit air being drawn in. The fresh air ends up at about 50 degrees Fahrenheit. Body heat, heat from home appliances, some passive solar heat and the supplementary heat source provide the rest of the heat to maintain a comfortable indoor temperature.

Superinsulation is being put to a tough test in Minnesota in an innovative and multi-faceted home demonstration project. The DEPD, in conjunction with the insulation contractors association northwest trade group is sponsoring a pilot project to demonstrate the effectiveness of superinsulation construction. It includes home construction, preparation of house plans, curriculum development and research.

Twenty grants were awarded to vocational-technical schools and high schools throughout the state to build superinsulated homes through their carpentry and building trades programs. These homes are scheduled to be completed in the spring of 1983 and sold on the open market. At least $1,000 worth of building materials will be discounted or donated by insulation manufacturers and local material suppliers. Six grants were awarded to school and neighborhood groups to remodel existing homes using superinsulation techniques.

Four superinsulation house plans have been developed and are offered for sale to the public at $25 each. These houses range from 1200 to 1750 square feet floor area and include rambler, ranch, split level or two-story designs. There are special bulk rate discounts and builders package prices available.

Superinsulation curriculum produced by the energy division and the department of education will be used in secondary and vocational schools. Classes for builders and consumer groups will be scheduled by several schools this fall.

A comprehensive research effort is underway. Data will be collected from the new and remodeled superinsulation homes to analyze performance and payback.

For more information on superinsulation or the home demonstration project, call the energy information center at 296-5175 in the Twin Cities or toll-free 1-800-652-9747 outside the metro area. Superinsulation house plan brochure is also available by calling the above numbers.

Wayne Rausch Attends Camp

Wayne Rausch of Steiner 4-H club attended conservation camp at Lake Itasca, June 6 to 10.

Some of the objectives of the camp were to develop some new personal skills in conservation, identify current conservation issues and concerns, and create a broader understanding and awareness of what conservation is.

Wayne participated in a variety of activities and developed a plan of action for conservation project work in Pennington county.

Summer Nights Are Dangerous For Motorists

Odds that a person will be killed, maimed or badly injured on the road are greatest during the 101 critical days between the Memorial day and Labor day weekends, according to the national safety council.

Motor vehicle crash deaths, tallied in Minnesota during that high-risk period, bear this out, affirmed Thomas A. Boerner, director of the office of traffic safety of the state department of public safety.

In 1982, 215 people met untimely ends in accidents on Minnesota roads during that critical 101 day span. Nationally, the toll came to 12,960 during the months of June, July and August of 1982.

July is by far the most dangerous month for Minnesota motorists. Last July, 80 people died in crashes on Minnesota roads. Another 3,721 were injured. The Fourth of July weekend alone accounted for 14 deaths and 389 injuries.

Most perilous time to be on the road, Minnesota statistics would seem to indicate, would be on a Saturday night between the hours of midnight and 3 a.m.

In 1982, 106 fatal crashes took place on Saturdays, far more than on any other day of the week. Of the 514 fatal crashes chalked up in Minnesota that year, 103 occurred between midnight and 3 a.m.

To beat the odds, the Minnesota department of public safety urges motorists to drive defensively and to buckle up.

In driving defensively, there are six things to concentrate on. First and foremost are other drivers. No matter how good a driver you are, an error in judgment on their part — or a blow-out — could cost you your life. The condition of the road, the behavior of the flow of traffic, the weather, the limitations of your own vehicle and your visibility to other drivers are additional things to keep in mind.

Beware of the seven things that can destroy your concentration and contribute to those dismal statistics — alcohol, daydreaming, distractions, fatigue, anger, frustration and stress.

But being careful and alert are not enough. Your best bet to beat the odds is to buckle your safety belt. Your chances of avoiding critical injuries improve by a whopping 51 per cent if you are buckled into a lap and shoulder safety belt.

With your life at stake, those are pretty good odds.

Computer Use Can Be Expanded

Hundreds of thousands of microcomputers joined the work force last year; even though these units are more versatile than ever, they may not be doing all they could for small business. The problem is not so much that computers are shirkers, but that somebody is not putting those new capacities to work.

Microcomputers were originally purchased to do the simple, basic jobs they were designed to perform. According to the Minnesota society of certified public accountants (MSCPA), whose members advise small business owners on electronic data processing, new technology has equipped these units with a greater capacity which too frequently remains untapped.

"Business owners quickly realized microcomputers could do simple, repetitive jobs cost effectively," says Richard Sullivan, a member of the computer applications subcommittee of the American Institute of CPAs. "They also learned to buy software first, then select the hardware which could accommodate it."

With software technology escalating rapidly, CPAs are saying if this capacity is to be harnessed, the hardware needs upgrading.

While microcomputer hardware can be upgraded with adapters, control boards, or printers, the harder part of the problem is convincing business owners that burgeoning capacities make it worthwhile, according to Sullivan. Microcomputers can streamline accounting functions, help management monitor cash flow, forecast economic slowdowns, and even analyze investments, but businesses should have professional advice to make this cost effective, he says.

One of its more dramatic new capabilities, transforming electronic bits into elaborate charts or graphs, makes it easier to grasp visually what the numbers mean. Converting columns of figures into pie charts, for example, adds an important and convincing dimension to group presentations.

Allied to electronic graphics is a new capacity for comparing information. It's called "electronic spreadsheet," a method for flashing on the screen columns of data in parallel columns. These software programs project hypothetical alternatives to a range of "what if" situations. Typical problems could include: what if you were to rent space for your business instead of buying the building? or were to diversify your product line? or were to move your company to another city?

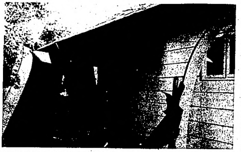
With help from CPAs, business owners are realizing the microcomputer potential in practical business situations. A local trucker charts a vehicle maintenance program; another business lays out its entire general accounting.

Microcomputers also produce printed matter, a facility shared by even desk top models, and they even communicate with other computers over telephone lines.

Prices are declining for hardware and software programs, according to CPAs. Business microcomputers can cost $25,000, but more popular ranges are between $3,000 and $5,000. Software varies widely in price; rudimentary family budget plans may run under $20, while a program to direct a comprehensive corporate accounting system might cost $5,500.

On the market for four years, microcomputers are increasingly available in a growing size and complexity. Sullivan believes that if prices continue downward, the units could become as common as telephones. But, he warns, if business wants to take advantage of the added jobs it can do, they'll have to rewrite the microcomputer's job description.

"While the microcomputer is certainly a useful tool, there is no universal selection criteria as all businesses remain unique," says Michael Miller, chairman of MSCPAs management advisory committee. "Our role as CPAs is to help business owners and managers select a microcomputer based on the individual requirements of each business."



VIEW FROM the southwest corner of the Robert Baker home east of St. Hilaire gives a perspective of the roof, which appears to have lifted completely off the house, before settling back onto the three standing walls, several feet too far to the west. The house was just in the process of being remodeled, with new siding all around, new roofing and numerous improvements to the interior.

BOB BAKER and his son Elliot returned to their shattered home just east of St. Hilaire on Tuesday morning, after spending the night with friends in town. Their house was almost totally destroyed by an explosion Monday afternoon, which left both of them limping, but miraculously alive. Neither could recall exactly how they got outside the building following the explosion, noting that it all happened so fast that they were in a state of shock. Following the accident, they were taken to Northwestern Hospital in Thief River Falls, where they were treated and released. Mrs. Baker was released from the hospital on Tuesday afternoon. Her father Ed Gregory, who was visiting at the time of the explosion, received only minor cuts and scratches, but her mother remained hospitalized in stable condition as of this writing.

ED GREGORY, Oklahoma City, OK, who was visiting at the Robert Baker home just east of St. Hilaire when it exploded on Monday, was busy sifting through the wreckage on Tuesday, trying to find his wife's personal belongings. The Gregories, who are Mrs. Baker's parents, had originally planned to return home on Tuesday, but were delayed, since both Mrs. Gregory and Mrs. Baker were hospitalized as a result of the explosion.

Minn. Science Museum Opens "Flyers" Film

"Flyers," a new film at the Science Museum of Minnesota, will give viewers the sensation of being in a plane's cockpit. "Flyers" opens Monday, July 25, in the William L. McKnight-3M Omnitheater, 10th and Wabasha, St. Paul.

"Flyers" is the story of a World War II aviator who turns his fascination for flying into a career performing aerobatic stunts and restoring aircraft.

In one of the most spectacular sequences, a novice stuntman disregards instructions not to unhook his safety strap during a wingwalk high above the Grand Canyon. When the plane takes a roll, the man loses his grip and plummets to what appears to be certain death.

A 15-minute, museum-produced prologue to "Flyers" features Orville and Wilbur Wright and basic aeronautic principles.

In conjunction with "Flyers," the museum is hosting two exhibits in celebration of the air and space bicentennial. The Lindbergh Jenny photo exhibit of over 200 photos commemorates the 60th anniversary of Charles Lindbergh's life in aviation.

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor,

The national unemployment figure still stands at more than 10 per cent. That figure, put in human terms, means more than 11,192,000 Americans are out of work. And that doesn't even count the millions of long-term jobless — who've exhausted their benefits — along with their hope.

Newsweek magazine noted in a June 18 article that few economists "expect that unemployment will drop below 10 per cent this year and many jobs are probably gone for good." Other economists are predicting that the return to more tolerable jobless levels will be painfully slow. Dr. Allen Sinai of Data Resources, Inc., predicted that the unemployment rate probably would fall by just one percentage point a year for the next several years — not much comfort for the millions currently on the unemployment lines.

Compounding this bad news is the fact that the most likely American for continued unemployment will be, as Harvard Prof. James Medoff predicted, "a blue-collar, prime-age, male breadwinner in the Midwest," who doesn't want to move because he's tied to his home economically and socially, and whose employer doesn't want to go to the expense of retraining him when he's close to retirement. None of that sounds too helpful for today's workers, does it? The highly complex, technological - computer systems are coming in fast — the Age of Electronics is here.

The time has come, I think, for America to step in — not with public works jobs that don't do enough or provide enough jobs, but with meaningful efforts to allow these workers to earn the benefit checks they receive and perhaps a lot more.

I know many proposals have been sent to Congress, and we know that no one solution holds the sole answer. But with 11 million unemployed, we have to try a combination of approaches to get these people back to work.

Call it "Work-Fare," call it a new "Civilian Conservation Corps," call it anything you like — we need some programs in this country to give people back their dignity, to allow them to hold their heads up high.

What I am proposing is a system whereby workers could still collect those much-needed unemployment checks, but at the same time, work for the city or county, state or federal government, earning those checks in return.

In 1983, our municipal and state economies are strained to the breaking-point. Our states do well to hold the line, especially faced as they are with long-deferred capital, maintenance and replacement expenditures needed on a massive scale to protect past investments in roads, bridges, buildings, sewers and water systejs.

Since there already is a strong need to salvage this deteriorating public substructure, and the government already is committing tens of billions of dollars to social programs that support and shelter the unemployed and able-bodied poor, wouldn't this provide an alternative?

We owe it to the millions of unemployed Americans out there to formulate some proposals now that will help them regain their lost dignity and to stand tall again in the work force.

O.H. Halland,
A grassroots Democrat

Craft Of Making Paper Is Revived

Moorhead State University
News Service

Why are copies of the Gutenberg Bible (printed between 1450 and 1455) still usable while 40 per cent of the books in the Library of Congress are too brittle to lend out?

Although papermaking techniques haven't changed much since a Chinese eunuch named Ts'ai Lun created the first fiber-based piece of paper 2,000 years ago, its quality and character have.

"It used to be a craft," says Tim Ray, a professor of art at Moorhead state university who taught a workshop on papermaking this summer. "Now it's a technology. And because there's so much paper around us today, I think we take it for granted. Paper used to be a rare and precious material. Now it's just part of our surroundings."

But some people are rekindling that old-fashioned quality. And they're making paper by hand again. Not from wood pulp. But the old way, from rags and fiberous plants. Most of them are artists.

"Along with canvas and stone, paper has been a universal material in art," says Ray, who spent a sabbatical last year exploring papermaking techniques at a Chicago art institute workshop in Michigan and independently in New York. "It should be a basic, fundamental part of an artist's knowledge. But I've been drawing and painting on paper for 20 years and I've just begun looking at it as a substance rather than a vehicle."

Instead of just imposing an image on a neutral surface, some artists are beginning to look at paper as part of the image they create on it. By making their own paper, they can control its texture, size, shape, color and even its transparency.

"I don't know how to explain it," Ray said. "It's like the paper talks back to you. Or like having a closer relationship with your materials. Once you've worked on it, you'll have a preference for handmade paper. It's a matter of paying attention to details."

But there's also the emotional rush that comes with self-creation. "Why do weavers make their own T-shirts instead of buying them at a department store?" Ray asks. "Maybe it's the satisfaction of adding their own style of quality to something they've created themselves. Listen, there's an incredible amount of machine made paper available today. But handmade paper is different. It's personal."

Paper takes its name from papyrus, a reed the ancient Egyptians split and bounded into sheets to form a writing material. But the derivation isn't precise. True paper, Ray said, is made from the cellulose fibers in plants and textiles.

Although modern-day paper technology is complex, Ray said, learning the basics of the ancient craft is fairly simple. You start by grinding, beating and macerating the cellulose material — rags, plants — in water until the fibers separate. The wet mass, called the pulp, is then placed on a moulded screen, drained and pressed. What's left when the pulp dries is paper, cellulose fibers bound together on a flat sheet.

The technique was developed in A.D. 105 by a Chinese minister of works, Ts'ai Lun, who wanted a writing material superior to silk or split bamboo. He found that hemp, old fishnets and inner bark of the mulberry tree could be broken into fibers in water and pounded into a sheet.

The discovery spread slowly, Ray said, But eventually replaced parchment and vellum (animal skins) throughout most of the world.

Although all plants contain cellulose — straw, cornstalks, even cabbage — cotton and linen rags became the primary stock for most papers. Textile fibers, Ray said, are longer, stronger, more supple and resilient than most other plant fibers. The textiles also contain more cellulose (cotton 98 per cent compared to wood at about 40 per cent). Consequently fewer impurities have to be extracted in the process.

Demand for paper, though, was listless until Gutenberg invented the printing press in the 15th century. "It was an instant marriage between paper and the press," Ray said.

Not only were animal skins (then the most common writing surface) too uneven for the press, but they were becoming scarce in the face of a rising publishing industry. It's estimated that one parchment copy of the Gutenberg Bible would require the hides of over 300 sheep.

But as demand for paper rose, even the supply of rags began to dwindle.

During the Civil War, Ray said, the rag shortage was so severe that a Maine papermaker began importing Egyptain mummies for their linen wrappings. But he had competition. Egyptian railroads then were burning mummies to fuel their locomotives.

In the mid-19th century a method was developed to grind logs into paper pulp, making use of the world's huge and renewable forests. Soon after, it was discovered that chemicals could also be used to pulp wood.

By the turn of the century, Ray said, chemically pulped wood paper was as universal as rag paper 50 years earlier. The cheaper, more efficient process launched what's been called the Age of Paper, a time when shirtfronts, bonnets, carpets, curtains and even coffins were being made from paper products.

But the acids and finishing chemicals used in the new techology, Ray said, damaged the archival quality of the paper — its ability to last for centuries. The acidic residue, when reacting with air and moisture, turn the modern papers brittle and yellow with time.

"Those impurities could be eliminated with a more thorough rinsing or with an alkali dip," Ray said. "And some paper companies are researching that problem now. But the economics aren't right. Speed of production is more important because of the tremendous demand for paper."

Although archival quality is one reason some artists are turning to handmade paper, Ray said, the primary reason is quality control. Machine made paper may be more uniform and more technologically and mechanically perfect, but hand crafted paper can be made in any shade of color, any thickness, size, texture or shape. For artists who look at paper not just as a surface for creation but as part of the creation itself, getting involved in its production is essential.

Besides drawing or painting on it, Ray said, handmade paper can also be manipulated as an art form in itself. "You can sculpt it like clay, so there are all kinds of possibilities. Some people have planted seeds in the pulp that sprout after the paper's been formed. Just use your imagination."

Starting a papermaking workshop at MSU involved a major hurdle for Ray. How would the class break down rags into fiberous pulp? The process required a Hollander beater, an oblong tub with a set of gears inside that mash and macerate the rags. Invented in 1680, the Hollander beater became a mainstay for the craft and still is in small handmade paper mills.

To buy one on the commercial market would cost a few thousand dollars. And with the state budget freeze, that was out of the question. So Ray asked a staff welder at the university, Ray Bjerke, if he could build one. He did.

Ray has been using denim rags, cotton linters (pieces too short for cloth) and flax tow for paper stock in his workshop. "We're at the edge of the paper industry here and we use whatever hand-me-downs they'll give us," he said.

"I don't know how far I'll go with hit personally," he added. "I'll probably begin using more handmade paper to paint on. And depending on demand, we might offer the workshop here again. But usually we teach papermaking through independent study. It really doesn't take that long to learn."

A craftsman named Dard Hunter is credited with renewing interest in handmade paper in this country when he set up his own mill in Connecticut during the 1920's. Since then, riding in the wake of a simmering back-to-the-basics trend, handmade paper has made some inroads among artists. "But the demand for it really isn't very large," Ray said.

Although the books, magazines and newspapers printed on machine made paper today may not survive the decade in good stead, video screens and microfilm copies are coming to the rescue. That may make the archival quality of handmade paper superfluous, but its distintive quality should only gain in stature.

Reagan Acts To Close Sugar Act Loophole

President Reagan has accepted proposals by Congressman Arlan Stangeland to protect area jobs with a ban on "sugar-dumping" from Canada.

On Tuesday night, the President issued a proclamation which closed a technical loophole in the 1981 sugar program that permitted Canadian firms to dump foreign sugar on the U.S. market in the form of "sugar blends."

The proclamation also directs an investigation by the U.S. international trade commission into the matter of "sugar-dumping."

"This is an outstanding move by the President," Congressman Stangeland said. "It not only protects the livelihood of 50,000 people who depend on the sugar beet industry in our area, but it also keeps Americans from becoming dependent on a cartel of foreign sugar producers.

Congressman Stangeland, who was the original author of the 1981 Sugar program, brought the matter of the Canadian loophole to the President's attention last fall. Agriculture Secretary John Block recently recommended a "zero quota" and an ITC investigation to the White House.

"If we had not had a sugar program passed in 1981, America would be out of the beet business today," the four-term House veteran said. "Beet-growers would have been forced to turn to other crops that are already in surplus."

"This would have weakened our local economy," said Stangeland, ranking Republican member on the House agriculture sugar subcommittee. "Thousands of families depend on incomes from growing, processing or transporting beets, as well as from the Main street stores that serve the beet-growing community.

"Undermining the 1981 sugar program would also devastate consumers," Congressman Stangeland said. "America already imports around 50 per cent of its sugar. If our domestic industry collapsed, we would be entirely at the mercy of foreign producers."

Stangeland, a life-long family farmer, represents America's largest beet-producing district.

"President Reagan and the department of agriculture have done a real service for our area and the country," Congressman Stangeland said. "Their action is responsible and will be effective in protecting Minnesota jobs."

Peroxide Bleach Predigests Weeds

Peroxide, a common bleach, predigests weeds and stems of crop plants in laboratory studies and frees the components for possible use as feed and chemical raw materials, says a U.S. department of agriculture biochemist.

Michael Gould from the United States department of agriculture says plant stems, stalks, straws, husks, hulls, cobs and wood contain more energy than seeds, but are little used for feed and chemical products because they are hard to digest. To free components that contain energy-yielding sugars, he treats plant parts 12 hours at room temperature with a solution of hydrogen peroxide that is about as alkaline as strong soap (pH 11.5). This peroxide is a common antiseptic as well as a bleach.

Treatment is like a tenderizing process. It frees components in the plant parts for digestion by animals and microorganisms and for chemical reactions. "Changes in composition are accompanied by dramatic changes in physical properties," Gould says. "During the wheat straw treatment, for instance, chopped straw disintegrated into highly absorbent fibers with a pulp-like consistency." He also treated corn stalks, husks and cobs, stems of soybeans and foxtail, a weed grass, kenaf stalks and oak wood shavings in the agricultural research service studies.

"Chemical energy from the peroxide makes the reaction go at room temperature," Gould says. It saves the cost of fuel for heating. The treatment uses one part of hydrogen peroxide for about four parts of straw, a proportion that might be too costly in an industrial scale process, depending upon the value of the feed and industrial raw materials produced. "Furthermore," Gould says, "continuing studies may lead to ways to lower the peroxide requirement significantly."

This first study at the Northern regional research center was designed not to develop an industrial process but to learn more about the plant components, cellulose, lignin and hemicellulose, and how to get them out of the plant materials. Gould says a process "may be years in the future and with many variations from the present treatment, depending upon what we learn in further research. Right now, for example, we are studying how the peroxide changes the plant materials. We think it may react primarily with lignin to yield oxygen and oxidized lignin fragments. These new products may have potential as chemical raw materials."

Feeding trials of treated crop residues have started in cooperation with George C. Fahey, Jr., animal scientist at the University of Illinois. In the first studies, cattle appear to digest almost all of a treated straw product, primarily cellulose, in 24 hours. They digest less than half of untreated straw even in 72 hours.

"Complete use of the cellulose, hemicellulose and lignin from agricultural residues to produce cattle feed, simple sugars, alcohol and feedstock chemicals," Gould says, "would be a positive factor in the overall economics of a commercial peroxide process."

Commericial process could aid soil conservation, he said. It could furnish a market for grass or other soil-protecting crops planted instead of row crops or cultivated crops on hillsides and strip-mined land.

Cellulose is a fibrous substance making up most of the plant walls and plant products such as paper, cotton and linen. Gould says it is a source of the same glucose sugar obtained now from corn starch for making ethyl alcohol. If cellulose in crop residues can be made more digestible, it may be fed to cattle for producing meat and milk for people.

Hemicellulose is another component of plant cell walls. It is the source of another sugar, xylose, which can be converted to alcohol by the yeast, Pachysolen, in a process developed at the Northern center.

Lignin cements cellulose and hemicellulose in and around plant cells like mortar and concrete in and around bricks in a wall. It is a source of many compounds that could be converted to new products such as plastics and other synthetics now made from petrochemicals, Gould says. Lignin gives strength to plant stems and protects the cellulose from attack by microorganisms and chemists.

"Numerous pretreatments have been developed to increase the susceptibility of cellulose in agricultural residues and wood to digestion by enzymes," Gould says. "These pretreatments all seem to have some major drawback. Most do not increase digestibility to the maximum possible. The few that do allow maximum digestion use too much fuel, use expensive or toxic chemicals, or generate toxic products."

Alkaline hydrogen peroxide dissolved most of the hemicellulose and more than half the lignin in chopped wheat straw within 12 hours, Gould says. The treatment also "opened" a crystalline, indigestible part of the cellulose to digestion by an enzyme from the fungus, Trichoderma. The enzyme converted more than 95 per cent of the cellulose in the treated straw to glucose sugar. It converted less than 10 per cent of the cellulose in untreated straw to the sugar.

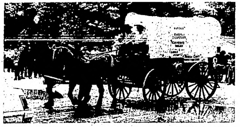
A yeast, Saccharomyces, converted the glucose to ethyl alcohol, yielding about 90 per cent of all the alcohol that the straw cellulose could produce. Gould compared the yeast's growth and alcohol production on the cellulose, on a medium containing the dissolved lignin and on a conventional fermentation medium. "Neither the lignin-containing solution nor the treated cellulose appeared to be in any way toxic or inhibitory to the yeast's growth or ethanol production," he says.

"This is especially important since peroxide-treated crop residues may find use as high energy feeds for ruminants."

Insoluble material, mostly lignin, remaining after both peroxide treatment and enzymic digestion amounted to seven per cent of the original straw. "In other words," Gould says, "93 per cent of the original straw was solubilized by the combined treatment with alkaline peroxide and Trichoderma enzyme."

"The new lignin products formed during the peroxide reaction include low molecular weight carboxylic acids. They have potential as chemical feedstocks." Formation of these products instead of phenolic acids formed in other treatments may account for the lack of toxicity in lignin dissolved in the peroxide treatment, Gould says.

ANTIQUE ITEMS were on display in the St. Hilaire school building during the centennial observance in that city last weekend. While interest was shown in many of the items, such as the spinning wheel in the foreground, more people seemed interested in the old photos and newspaper clippings on display in the adjoining room. Emil Harbott Jr. was in charge of the antique display and noted that many residents of the community were reluctant to have their family heirlooms on display.



COVERED WAGON float sponsored by Versa Craft Construction was a popular one in the centennial parade at St. Hilaire on Sunday. Owned by Linus Schmitz, with a team owned by Russell Jesperson, the wagon continued to please the crowd after the parade was over by taking many bystanders for a ride over the streets of the 100 year old community.

Senator Says New GRS Bill Seems Secure

In what Senator Dave Durenberger called "evidence of the broad support for general purpose federal-local aid," the Senate finance committee has sent to the floor a three-year extension of the general revenue sharing (GRS) program.

The committee's bill, which was reported out late Wednesday, preserves the current GRS funding level of $4.6 billion per year, which is divided among some 39,000 local governments nationwide. Unlike other federal aid, this funding can be put to any use the local government deems necessary.

(Early this year Durenberger introduced a similar bill, calling for the same extension period and funding level. Seventy-five Senators — three-quarters of the Senate — are cosponsoring that bill.)

Noting that the current GRS program expires on Sept. 30, 1983 Durenberger said, "It's a great relief to see this action by my fellow committee members, well in advance of the expiration date. In the past, eleventh-hour votes on GRS have left local budget-planners agonizing over the status of their revenue sharing funds.

"Though we still have to get final Senate approval and then reconcile our version with the House, I think we can say emphatically that the revenue sharing program is secure," he added.

The House is preparing to consider its own GRS bill, a five-year extension with a funding increase of $730 million.

Durenberger said he would "ultimately" like to see the program broadened and its funding increased. "However," he said, "the formula for allocating GRS dollars within states is in bad need of improvement to make it more equitable and to target the funding more effectively. Right now, especially in these tight-money times, we can't justify sending out increased GRS funds under a flawed formula."

To that end, Durenberger successfully offered an amendment under which any increase in GRS funding would have to be accompanied by improvements in the intrastate funding allocation formula.

A spokesperson for the Reagan administration reiterated the administration's adamant opposition to any funding increase for GRS, but added that such a step would at least be "less objectionable" under the Durenberger amendment.

The committee rejected an administration proposal to require annual audits for all governments who receive $25,000 or more in GRS funding per year, a requirement opponents considered burdensome. The current law requires such audits every three years.

DPS Emergency Travel Advice For Motorists

When an emergency occurs on the roadway there is pressure to think quickly and react immediately. To help the conscientious driver prepare before a hazardous situation occurs, Chief Roger Ledding of the Minnesota state patrol, a division of the department of public safety, has the following suggestions:

— If your brakes fail: Pump the brake pedal quickly. If this does not slow or stop the car, apply the parking brake. If you still cannot stop, shift into a lower gear and pull as far over to the side of the road as you safely can.

— If you are blinded by oncoming headlights: Slow down. Flick your bright lights, if the vehicle is more than 1000 feet away, and then lower them. This might remind the oncoming driver to lower his lights. Avoid looking at the glaring lights. Look to the edge of the road. Keep as far to the right as you can.

— If you begin to skid: Gradually take your foot off the gas pedal. Avoid slamming on the brake. Steer in the direction of the skid. When you have stopped skidding, apply the brakes gradually by pumping them. Be ready for a possible counter skid.

— If your car catches on fire: If you smell smoke or see flames, pull off the road immediately. Turn off the ignition and get everyone out of the car. Send someone to call the fire department and a law enforcement agency. Keep away from the car in case of an explosion.

— If a tire blows out: Avoid slamming on the brakes, instead pump lightly on the brake. Grip the steering wheel firmly to guide the vehicle on a straight path. Pull off the road to change the tire, placing flares or triangular warning reflectors behind your car at 10 and 100 feet on a two-way roadway with one 100 feet in front of the vehicle. On a one-way roadway, place them behind the vehicle at 10, 100 and 200 feet.

— If your car is forced onto a soft shoulder: Avoid slamming on the brakes. Slow down gradually. Avoid turning back on the pavement too quickly.

If you have to make an emergency stop while traveling on a highway there are a few safety precautions motorists can take, according to Chief Ledding.

— If you are on a road with a paved shoulder, signal and pull off the road at near-traffic speed. If the shoulder is unpaved, slow down, signal and turn off when it is clear. Try to get to a safe spot as far off the road as possible. Turn on your four-way flashers.

— Set flares or triangular warning devices as suggested previously. If you are stopped on a well-traveled highway and safely away from traffic, it is recommended that you wait in your car for help. If you are disabled in an especially hazardous spot or do not have flares or reflectors, stand a distance behind the car and off the roadway and signal a warning to oncoming drivers.

— To indicate that you need help, raise the hood of your car and hang a white scarf or handkerchief on your door handle or car aerial.

USDA Improves School Lunch Management

U.S. department of agriculture has culminated a four year effort by finalizing a comprehensive system for finding and correcting management problems in local school lunch programs, assistant secretary Mary C. Jarratt said recently.

Procedure, called the assessment, improvement and monitoring system (AIMS), fosters better overall management of the lunch program by states, monitors the use of federal funds, and protects the nutritional integrity of meals served under the national school lunch program.

System has been operating on an interim basis since 1981 while USDA fine-tuned the procedures based on the practical experience of states implementing the plan.

Even on an interim basis, Jarratt said, "AIMS has made a real difference in the effective management of the federal school lunch program." Prior to AIMS, USDA had no nationwide program for monitoring school lunch management by states.

Under the final rule published June 17 in the "Federal Register," states are required to perform on-site reviews or audits of all school districts on a periodic basis. They assess local program operations against designated performance standards and take corrective action if problems are found.

USDA has earmarked $4 million annually in available state administrative expense funds to assist states in carrying out AIMS requirements. These funds, as well as other funds provided to states by USDA for administering the school nutrition programs, can be withdrawn if a state fails to complete AIMS requirements.

The Black Lung Benefits and Revenue Act of 1981, which became law in December, was a major achievement in terms of budgetary impact and of labor-management cooperation, according to the Labor Department's annual report for fiscal year 1982.

SPORTS ARENA in Thief River Falls was the site of the family reunion for descendants of Peder and Mathilde Engelstad, early residents of the Thief River Falls community. Sunday activities included a morning worship service, noon meal and afternoon program which included a spokesman for each generation of the family. This photo was taken as the noon meal was being served. Speaker at the morning worship service was Rev. Jerry Borgie of San Diego, CA, a great-grandson of Peder and Mathilde Engelstad.

NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS from years gone by attracted interested readers at the St. Hilaire centennial observance Saturday, Sunday and Monday. The exhibit of photos and clippings was arranged in the St. Hilaire school building, recently sold by School District 564 to Doug Dehnert.

was sentenced to a jail term of 15 days.

Peder was relieved to have regained his wardrobe, but he could not help wondering just what he would have done had the culprit succeeded in concealing the loot and convincing the authorities of his innocence.

(Crossing the North Sea to England — June 6, 1882)

There were neither beds nor bunks in the aft quarters, only sailors' hammocks that swung with the motion of the boat, and there was soon utter confusion among the seasick passengers. When the SS Angelo listed heavily to one side, loose objects such as tin cups and empty bottles — whose contents had been eagerly devoured and now more eagerly ejected by the revelers — came rattling under the hammocks; with the list in the other direction, the same conglomeration of articles, spattered with vomit, would rattle and slide back again, throwing off balance any unfortunate person who dared to venture out of his hammock.

(On Board a Train Taking Them Across England)

With everyone aboard, they were whisked across England to Liverpool and taken to another Emigrant Hotel in the slum district near the docks. Here they saw people picking through garbage, and while Peder was walking to the hotel carrying Baby Ludvig, a young man — maybe with a warped sense of humor — stuck his foot in front of Peder in an attempt to trip him.

(Arriving at Boston Harbor in USA)

It was June 28, 1882, when the SS Palmyra with its cargo of immigrating humanity docked in Boston Harbor. It was also the first birthday of Baby Ludvig, and what greater event could make this day than setting foot on American soil. They had arrived, and Peder had between five and six dollars! It had fallen to Peder to act as spokesman for the group inasmuch as Kjos could speak only Norwegian, and Peder through his studies had acquired a fair knowledge not only of English, but of Spanish and German, as well.

(In North Dakota)

They reached their objective, Hillsboro, at noon on Monday, July 3, 1882, five days after leaving Boston and 27 days after their departure from Norway. Peder had not informed his parents of the time they would arrive due to the uncertainty of traveling on schedule, but Hillsboro was a community of only 200 people, and it was not difficult to learn the location of Even's farm — three and a half miles west along the road leading to Mayville and about one-half mile off the road.

Trunks were left at the station while suitcases and smaller bundles were carried. As they walked the wagon road along the Goose River, they passed groves of trees made up mostly of species they did not recognize; so, when they spotted some scattered birches on the banks of the river, it gave them a warm feeling of being greeted by friendly familiar faces of their homeland.

There was little time for pleasant reverie, however, as the weight of luggage made it necessary for them to shift the load from one hand to the other. Their task soon was greatly complicated by small insects coming out of the long grass at the sides of the road determined to draw blood from any sufficiently exposed part of the anatomy. Time and again, Mathilde referred to "disse stugge dyr" (these horrid bugs) and tried desperately to protect little Ludvig from their sting. This was their first encounter with swarms of mosquitoes!

As they trudged on, they became aware of three people coming toward them on the road, and they soon recognized Karen, Even and Hans. Suitcases and bundles were put down, as both groups hurried forward to meet each other. Although the setting was the middle of a dirt road strewn with temporarily abandoned luggage and parcels, this meeting was a family reunion complete with spontaneous affection and some uncontrollable tears, punctuated by the ever-present mosquitoes playing their own kind of music.

(15 Days Later)

On July 18, just 15 days after their arrival at Hillsboro, Ludvig was dead! A small casket was constructed from plain lumber and lined with cloth; such wild flowers as were available on the farm were made into little floral pieces; and the funeral was held from the home with Peder and Even reading verses from the Bible and offering brief simple prayers. The little body was laid to rest in a small cemetery between Hillsboro and Even's farm.

(Summer Months)

July, August and September passed, while haying, harvesting and threshing followed each other in succession. Peder was overwhelmed with the wage of $2.00 a day, feeling that it was entirely out of proportion to the service he could render. It was far in excess of the wage paid for comparable labor in Norway.

(Across the Prairie By Ox Team)

A week after Kjos returned to Hillsboro (latter part of February, 1883) the three men set out for St. Hilaire by ox team, purchased by Peder from a neighboring farmer, Johannes Wensen. This gentleman was an acquaintance of Peder's from Norway who had arrived a few years earlier when land was still available along the Goose River, and Peder had stacked grain for him during the past fall. The oxen and the sleigh in which they rode had been bought with money supplies by Kjos — $125 for the oxen and $15 for the sleigh. Lane and Bright were large red oxen with long horns, Peder was the driver, and harnesses were used instead of a yoke.

They traveled over primitive trails in the general direction of St. Hilaire, about 60 miles northeast of Hillsboro "as the crow flies," but closer to 100 miles "as the oxen walk." The Red River of the North was crossed near Caledonia, Minnesota, when they followed a trail northward along the east bank of the river.

Their first night was spent on the farm of a bachelor several miles north of Caledonia, and Peder recalled that this man kept a very clean house and that when he was not engaged in some other activity, he would occupy himself knitting. This trail led them to Neby, Minnesota, where a general store was located, and here they started across the prairie toward Crookston, but before noon they were overtaken by a blinding snowstorm. At times, the storm was so intense they could barely see the oxen in front of them. On the middle of the prairie, while the storm was still raging, they came upon an unoccupied two-room shack and decided to seek shelter. Upon forcing open the locked door, they were surprised to find a bed with a mattress, some wood, and a lamp with a small amount of kerosene in it.

To protect the oxen from the blizzard, they were quickly crowded into the small kitchen. In the absence of a stove, the men improvised a substitute by slitting open two sheet metal stovepipes which were flattened and spread on the floor. Then, utilizing the dry wood they had found in the shack, they built a fire and soon were feeling the needed warmth to limber up their joints and muscles. They only escape for the smoke was through cracks around the rafters — or through windows and the door, that they chose to open as little and seldom as possible, and the snow in the cracks soon melted and dripped to the floor. Outside the drifts piled up as the blizzard continued until noon of the following day.

The three men then completely cleaned the two rooms and wrote their names and addresses on the wall together with an explanation of what had happened. Several years later while working with a threshing crew at Fisher, Minnesota, Peder met the owner of this homestead shack. When told about the incident, the man was very understanding and said that it was exactly what he would have done under similar circumstances.

The journey from here to Crookston was less difficult because the trail was soon on high ground where the snow drifts were not too deep for the oxen. The next stop was at Even Ericksen's farm near Crookston; Even was an acquaintance of Kjos' from Norway. The following night was spent with a farmer midway between Crookston and St. Hilaire, where it was customary for travelers to stop, and the next day they were at their destination, the home of Mikkel Anderson, north of St. Hilaire.

Two days later the men set out on skis to inspect the available land. The ground was covered with three to four feet of snow, making the inspection job difficult, but, they reasoned, where brush and willows grow, the soil must be fertile. They promptly decided to file on the property, and as a result of this decision, Peder and Schej rode to Crookston with Mikkel Anderson, where Peder filed on the 160-acre preemption in Section 14 at $1.25 per acre with a dowpayment of $10 being required.

At the same time, following the advice of Mikkel Anderson, Peder contested an adjoining 160 acres, also in Section 14, a procedure followed in securing the right to file homestead on land that apparently has been abandoned by the original homesteader. Schej went on to Hillsboro after filing preemption on property bordering Peder's claim — that years later became known as the Finhart Place — while Peder returned home with Mikkel Anderson.

(Meanwhile, Back in Hillsboro)

About the middle of March, before Peder came back, the weather had turned mild, the accumulated snowfall of the past winter had become an avalanche of water, and the Goose River, packed with ice, overflowed its banks doing a great deal of damage to the Bekkelund buildings. Cattle had been moved from the barn to higher ground where a haystack was located. Chickens, that had taken refuge to roost in the stable, often fell into the deep water and drowned, when they would be brought to the house, promptly plucked and prepared for cooking. As Mathilde pointed out, in spite of the many hardships of the flood, they were enjoying chicken dinners and suppers almost daily — a rare treat at that time.

A calf had been born and was kept in the house for its better protection; its home was upstairs with Mathilde and Louise, where they also shared their quarters with a little white pig that needed a dry haven for the sake of his comfort and good health. These four companions had managed in this manner for at least two weeks as the water swirled against the buildings, reached its height, and receded.

ST. HILAIRE
MUNICIPAL LIQUOR STORE

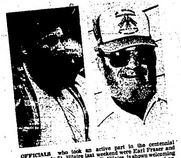
BRINGING UP THE REAR, this float sponsored by the St. Hilaire municipal liquor store actually missed the centennial parade on Sunday, not getting out on Main Street until after the procession was over and the backed up traffic had been released. While one might speculate on whether the stubborn character of the mule or the contents of his casks were at fault, the backed up traffic was the real culprit, delaying the arrival and unloading of the entry until it was too late. It was an unfortunate twist of fate for those who missed seeing the entry, as the authentic looking costumes worn by Raymond Scott and his beast of burden really would have been a crowd pleaser.

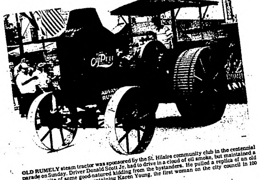
OBSERVERS of the parade in St. Hilaire on Sunday swelled the population of that city to several thousand. People stood and sat wherever they could find a dry spot. Reflections in the many water puddles made the crowd appear to be even larger than it was. Many events during the three day centennial celebration were squelched somewhat by the wet weather, but the clouds held back on Sunday afternoon, and the parade could only be referred to as a roaring success.

KIDS GAMES offered entertainment for the younger folks during the three day centennial celebration in St. Hilaire this past weekend. These youngsters were participating in a tire rolling race as part of the activites on Sunday.



OFFICIALS who took an active part in the centennial celebration in St. Hilaire last weekend were Earl Fraser and Bernard Huot. Fraser, mayor of St. Hilaire, is shown welcoming the guests at the all-school reunion at the national guard armory. Huot was chairman of the centennial committee and is pictured prior to the king and queen coronation and beard judging Saturday evening.

SPECIAL GUEST at the St. Hilaire school reunion Saturday evening at the national guard armory in Thief River Falls was Inez Patterson, a former teacher in the St. Hilaire school. Now 92 years young, she smiled when she noted she had "come the longest years" to attend the reunion dinner.



OLD RUMELY steam tractor was sponsored by the St. Hilaire community club in the centennial parade on Sunday. Driver Donald Scott Jr. had to drive in a cloud of oil smoke, but maintained a smile in spite of some good-natured kidding from the bystanders. He pulled a replica of an old "wanigan" or cook shack, containing Karen Young, the first woman on the city council in 100 years.

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHERS at the St. Hilaire school shared a few special minutes during the all-school reunion conducted Saturday as part of the St. Hilaire centennial. At left is Agnes Haugan Rolland who taught three years from 1936 through 1939 and again during the 1942-43 term. Her subjects were English, social studies, music, bookkeeping, typing and physical education. At right is Grace Dahle who taught social studies, English and physical education for two years from 1932 to 1934, then moved to Albert Lea where she taught for 32 years. She now lives at Albert Lea and Mrs. Rolland has lived at White Bear Lake since 1943.

PEARL DREES, who arranged the picture and clipping display for the St. Hilaire centennial held Saturday, Sunday and Monday, took time out Saturday to visit with one of the people attending. During a rainy Saturday afternoon, the exhibit of pictures and antiques in the St. Hilaire school building attracted considerable attention. Registration for the reunion banquet was also conducted in the building, as was the sale of centennial souvenir items.

WASHING CLOTHES the old fashioned hard way was demonstrated on this float, sponsored by Bernard and Evie Huot's B and E Laudromat. It was part of the parade held Sunday in St. Hilaire, as that city celebrated its 100th anniversary.

St. Hilaire Observes 100 Years of History During 3-Day Centennial July 2-3-4

EMIL HARBOTT JR. (with cap) looks on while visitors to the antique display at the St. Hilaire centennial inspect the ornate baby buggy on display. The exhibit in the former St. Hilaire school attracted considerable attention during the three-day celebration Saturday through Monday. Harbott was chairman of the antique exhibit for the centennial committee.

Arm Wrestling Set Sept. 4 At State Fair

Arm wrestling returns to the Minnesota state fair after a four-year absence with the state fair state arm wrestling championship scheduled for noon to 6 p.m. Sunday, September 4 at the KMSP TV stage near the grandstand.

First and second place prize money of $100 and $50 will be awarded to the top two finishers in each of eight classes including six men's divisions (two for left-handers) and two women's divisions.

Tournament will be sanctioned and conducted by the Minnesota professional arm wrestlers association, Inc., and competition will be limited to the first 250 registrants. Registration will be conducted in advance and the $10 entry fee includes admission to the fairgrounds. In addition, all competitors will receive a custom-designed T-shirt the day of the tournament.

For entry forms and more information on the state fair arm wrestling tournament, write to Arm Wrestling, Minnesota State Fair, St. Paul, Minn. 55108 or call (612) 642-2255.

AFTER TWO YEARS of teaching at the St. Hilaire school, Mrs. E.N. Reiersgord had to quit teaching because she married the superintendent. Terms of the contract at that time provided that women teachers who married gave up their jobs. E.N. Reiersgord was principal and superintendent at St. Hilaire for nine years and Bertha taught third and fourth grades before marrying him. She now lives in Crookston and is pictured above with Woodrow Almquist, chairman of the St. Hilaire school reunion committee. Part of the St. Hilaire centennial observance, the reunion was conducted Saturday at the national guard armory in Thief River Falls.

State Poison Control Center Is Designated

St. Paul-Ramsey medical center has been redesignated as the Minnesota poison control center by Sister Mary Madonna Ashton, Minnesota commissioner of health. St. Paul-Ramsey operates the center under the name of Minnesota poison control system (MPCS).

This designation marks the end of MPCS's first year of operation as the state poison information system. MPCS was awarded its first designation in September of last year. This designation, however, unlike the first, is valid for two years or until June 30, 1985. The Minnesota statute calling for designation of a single state poison center annually was changed. This change allows the commissioner to designate a poison center every odd year. The state funding, which accompanies the designation, will be appropriated annually.

MPCS will receive $125,000 in state monies to operate its programs in 1984. Additional funding comes from St. Paul-Ramsey medical center and Ramsey clinic associates, P.A. The state's contribution this year is an increase from the $77,000 awarded in 1982.

These additional funds will be used to develop new programs in three areas, according to Samuel Hall, M.D., MPCS medical director. The three areas are health education, increased involvement in MPCS by other hospitals and evaluation of MPCS.

Because of the additional money, Hall explained, MPCS will be able to have its current nurse-health educator spend more time developing and presenting public and professional poison education programs.

Getting other hospitals involved in the system will be another of the new programs initiated by MPCS this year. Hall said that MPCS is currently considering a program whereby small grants would be awarded to other health care centers who wish to become active participants in MPCS's programs. The requests for grants would be reviewed by the Minnesota poison informaton advisory council and commissioner of health.

A system of evaluating the effectiveness of MPCS and its programs in reducing poisonings will be the third new project undertaken, Hall said. A means for evaluating the program is currently being developed.

During its first nine months of operation, MPCS received about 15,000 calls from Minnesotans requesting poison information and-or emergency help. Over three-quarters of those calls were about children (ages one to six) who had come into contact with poisons. Twenty-two per cent of the calls were from Minnesotans outside the Twin Cities.

MPCS was the first program to offer Minnesotans toll-free WATTS access to the poison information pharmacists at St. Paul-Ramsey medical center. Poison information pharmacists staff MPCS 24 hours a day, seven days a week. These professionals are specifically trained to provide callers with poison information and-or emergency assistance.

The numbers to call are: (Outstate) 1-800-222-1222 or Twin Cities 221-2113. Poison prevention materials and telephone stickers are available to Minnesotans by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to MPCS, 640 Jackson St., St. Paul, MN 55101.

July Night Sparkles With Venus, Stars

Planet bright enough to be mistaken for a UFO and the summer triangle of three bright stars sparkle in the July sky.

Venus, Earth's sister planet, will reach its greatest brightness in our skies on the evening of July 19, a brilliance it achieves only once every 584 days. Nearly 100 times as bright as the brightest evening stars, the planet has been, during this phase, mistaken for a UFO, an enemy spy plane, a balloon, a hovering aircraft and other such phenomena. Look for it in the western sky after sunset.

The pale yellow planet wrapped in inhospitable sulphurous clouds looks its brightest now because its orbit has brought it to the same area of the solar system to which Earth's orbit has brought us. This situation, called the synodic period, occurs only once every 584 days because it takes 2.6 orbits of Venus and 1.6 orbits of Earth (1.6x365 days equal 584) for both planets to reach the same area. Venus orbits the sun faster — 224 and a fraction days — than Earth's journey of 365 and a fraction days because Venus is closer to the sun.

Since Venus constantly changes position vis-a-vis Earth, it goes through phases like the moon's. On July 19, it will be in its crescent phase, but will appear large and long since the planet is very near Earth. In its full phase, Venus is always on the opposite side of the sun and so appears smaller. These phases of the planet can be seen throughout the year through binoculars or a small telescope.

Also like the moon, Venus sometimes appears in the evening, sometimes in the morning, throughout the year. Greek astronomers of 2,500 years ago apparently did not know that it was the same planet. They called it Hesperus when it was the evening star and Phosphorus when it was the morning star.

July also brings the summer triangle of three bright stars, easily visible against the background of fainter ones. High in the sky, though east of the zenith, are Vega, Deneb and Altair.

Vega, a bright white star 26 light-years (156 trillion miles) away can be found very near the zenith as part of the constellation Lyra, a square of four fainter stars that looks a little like a lyre, the musical instrument for which it was named. Three times the size of the sun and 50 times as luminous, Vega is the fifth brightest star visible to us.

Not far to the east of Vega in the constellation Cygnus — which resembles a cross although it is named for a long-necked swan — lies Deneb. A very bright blue-white super-giant, it shines from 1,600 light years away. Despite its great distance Deneb is one of the 20 brightest stars visible to us because it is about 60,000 times as bright as the sun.

The third star, Altair, lies closer to the eastern horizon in the constellation Aquila, completing the triangle. At 16 light-years away, it is a bright white star that will be closely approached by the Pioneer 10 on the spacecraft's path well out of the solar system — in 227,075 years.

By autumn, this summer triangle will have moved to the far western sky and, by winter, all the stars will have set in our skies, an artifact of the movement of Earth in its orbit around the sun.

Twins Clinic Planned Here

A reminder that the touring Minnesota Twins youth baseball clinic program will make a stop in Thief River Falls Friday, July 15, at 5 p.m. at the fairgrounds baseball diamond.

Angelo Giuliani, Glenn Gostick and Mike Casey form the instructional team that focuses its 90-minute presentation upon the game's fundamentals, with participation by all the youngsters included in the program, offered free of charge.

It's estimated that some half-million kids have attended the clinics since the program's inception in 1961. Many of today's parents sending their youngsters to the clinics attended one or more of the sessions themselves when they were involved in youth baseball programs.

In case of rain the event will be held in the sports arena.

Legion Schedule Winds Down

Only four home playing dates remain on the 1983 Thief River Falls American Legion baseball schedule, including a 6 p.m. doubleheader Thursday against Bemidji.

Rest of the Thief River Falls home schedule includes 7 p.m. Northwest League games Tuesday, July 12, vs. Warroad and Wednesday, July 13, vs. Roseau, along with a 6 p.m. doubleheader Friday, July 15, vs. the Grand Forks Royals.

Thief River Falls has road games left Thurs., July 14 — at Hallock; Tuesday, July 19 — at Detroit Lakes; Wednesday, July 20 — at Roseau; Thursday, July 21 — at Crookston; and Saturday, July 23 — at Fergus Falls, a doubleheader.

Strandemo Eyes State Amateur

Jim Strandemo, a Mahnomen native who was once a member of the Northland community college golf team and a student teacher at Lincoln high school this past school year, has his sights set on winning the Minnesota state amateur golf tournament, scheduled to be played July 18-20 at the Detroit Country Club in Detroit Lakes.

He was the low qualifier for the event in a qualifying round recently on the course with a one-under-par 37-33) 70, and feels that if he's ever going to win the state amateur title, "this has to be the year," he told Ralph Anderson of the Becker County Record in Detroit Lakes.

Strandemo, 28, has played in the state amateur before, with his best showing being a 19th place finish. He's enjoying a strong 1983 season, following his state amateur qualifying round the following day with a 27-hole 105 title-winning performance in the Staples shortstop tournament after earlier winning at Crookston and Fargo-Moorhead.

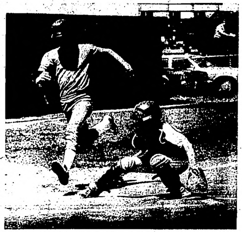
"I'm driving the ball pretty well and only needed 29 putts in (state amateur) qualifying," he told Anderson. "The Detroit Country Club course is in about the nicest shape I've ever seen it and the greens are the gestest I've played on all year, but I don't mind fast greens at all."

Detroit Lakes is host to the state amateur tournament for the first time, with the event normally reserved for the Twin Cities metropolitan area.

Strandemo was a two-time Region 13 medalist while helping lead the Northland community college golf teams coached by Al Adams to the 1974 and 1975 NJCAA Region 13 tournament titles and trips to the national tournaments in Ft. Meyers, Fla. and Hutchinson, Kansas. Lee Sorensen, Mark Metusalem, Jay Moum and Dick Penning rounded out that 1974 champion Northland team, while Penning, Dick Skay, Bruce Restad and Dave Kjos joined Strandemo on the 1975 Northland team.

Miscellaneous

+ A pair of North Tri-County Conference athletic standouts headed for the Bemidji State University football program, have been named recipients of BSU scholarships for the 1984 years. Kevin Prosser of Clearbrook was presented with the Cliff Morlan scholarship and Alan Wolden of Gonvick was named winner of the Allan Adams scholarship. Prosser, a 1983 Clearbrook graduated, lettered four years in football for the Hornets, an all-conference pick as a junior and senior, the league's most valuable lineman last fall and a member of the Nine-Man all-state team. He was also a basketball all-conference selection and was a track standout. The Cliff Moran scholarship was first awarded in 1979 honoring the long-time Bemidji Pioneer sports columnist who was one of BSU's strongest backers. Morlan wrote his daily column from March 1, 1941 until his death Nov. 12, 1979. Wolden, a 1983 Gonvick graduate, was one of the area's top all-around performers for the past three years. He was named the North Tri-County Conference most valuable back last year when he joined Prosser on the Nine-Man all-state team. He lettered four years in football, three years in basketball and twice in track, gaining the state meet twice. He was also the conference basketball MVP award winner as a junior and a senior. The Allan Adams memorial scholarship is named for the son of former BSU football coach Sparky Adams who was killed in an automobile accident.



THIEF RIVER FALLS runner Chris Bjorgaard crossed the plate before Warroad catcher Lance Sage, who had the ball in his glove, could turn and make the tag during the second inning of Tuesday's Babe Ruth Prep Baseball doubleheader opener on the fairgrounds diamond here. Thief River Falls 13-year-olds ran their season record to 17-1 with an 11-1, 14-4 twinbill sweep.

Elks Babe Ruth Baseball Tournament Pairings Set

A well-balanced field will be featured this weekend in the 15th annual Thief River Falls Elks Babe Ruth invitational baseball tournament for 14-15-year-olds.

Host Thief River Falls takes on defending champion Roseau at 10 a.m. Saturday to open the eight-team, single-elimination tournament that also has a consolation bracket.

Games will be played at both the fairgrounds and Northland community college diamonds — simultaneously throughout the day Saturday.

While Thief River Falls and Roseau meet at the fairgrounds, the Bemidji Lions and Crookston square off at Northland Saturday at 10 a.m. In the other bracket, 12:30 p.m. games will feature East Grand Forks vs. the Bemidji Braves at the fairgrounds and Red Lake Falls vs. Grand Forks Gerrels at Northland.

Championship round semifinal games will be played at 3 and 5:30 p.m. Saturday at the fairgrounds. Consolation round semifinals will be played that day at 3 and 5:30 p.m. at Northland.

Sunday's schedule starts with the consolation final at 12-noon, followed by the third place game at 2:30 p.m. and the championship game at 5.

Thief River Falls' Babe Ruth A team is 10-6 for the year. Coached by Mark Harder, the team has been idled for over a week by wet weather which forced cancellation of a Thursday doubleheader here with East Grand Forks, plus the Saturday-Sunday Horace May invitational tournament in Bemidji.

A portion of the Bemidji tournament, which featured 17 consecutive years without a rain postponement, was played Saturday before a late afternoon deluge stopped play and left the diamonds too wet for Sunday. Bemidji Lions defeated Park Rapids 6-1 and Bemidji Braves beat Menahga 13-3 before rain stopped the Roseau-Cass Lake and Thief River Falls-Detroit Lakes games.

Thief River Falls was scheduled to host Crookston today (Wednesday) and will entertain Warroad Thursday in 12-noon doubleheaders.

Legion Winner Over Karlstad

Jim Hallamek, in his first appearance since recovering from an appendectomy that has sidelined him for most of the 1983 season, hit a grand slam home run Tuesday and teammate Tim Bottem hit a three-run homer as Thief River Falls doubled Karlstad 12-6 in a Northwest League American Legion baseball game.

It was a reversal from Friday night when the two teams met here and Karlstad emerged with a 2-0 shutout victory. Thief River Falls increased its offensive production considerably in the rematch, collecting 14 hits after getting only six the last time out. Shortstop Kerry Wollin was 3-for-3 while Bottem, Brian Kemnitz and Ryan Drees each had two hits.

Still, it required a comeback as host Karlstad collected four consecutive extra base hits to open the second inning, securing a 4-2 lead. Keven Larson, Darin Grandstrand, Tommy John Deere and Jeff Larson all doubled in that assault, producing four of the seven Karlstad hits for the night.

But Thief River Falls went ahead in the third when Kemnitz and Bottem singled, followed by a walk given to Wollin, setting the stage for Hallamek's grand slam.

A run-scoring triple by Grandstrand pulled Karlstad back within 6-5 in the bottom of the third, but Thief River Falls broke it open with a four-run fourth when two erros and a single by by Tim Nyland preceded Bottem's home run.

A double by Wollin — the game's ninth extra-base hit — was followed by a wild pitch and an error for a sixth inning Thief River Falls run.

Thief River Falls is now 12-5 for the year, 4-3 in Northwest League play. Bemidji visits the fairgrounds diamond Thursday for a 6 p.m. doubleheader. A scheduled Thief River Falls weekend invitational appearance in Winnipeg was rained out.

TRF Prep Team 17-1 For Year

Thief River Falls' Babe Ruth Prep team for 13-year-olds gained a measure of revenge Tuesday with a pair of one-sided 11-1 and 14-4 baseball wins over Warroad on the fairgrounds diamond.

Coached by Doug Henke, Thief River Falls pushed its record to 17-1 with the sweep — the lone loss being a 26-6 rout at the hands of Warroad in the finals of the June 18-19 Warroad invitational.

This time Warroad could muster just three hits in two games. Chris Nelson pitched a two-hitter in the opener, with Chris Bjorgaard tossing a one-hitter in the second game.

Meanwhile, Thief River Falls bats were pounding out 27 hits. In the 11-1 first-game victory, Bjorgaard was 3-for-3 while Billy Dicken and Joel Swanson were both 2-for-2. Dicken hit a grand slam home run in the 14-4 second-game triumph. Dicken, Nelson, Swanson, Mike Bendickson and Jim Kappes all had two hits for the winners.

Thief River Falls was scheduled to visit Moorhead today (Wednesday) in a recent schedule addition before hosting Crookston Thursday and visiting Roseau Friday for 12-noon doubleheaders.

Unbeaten Neibauer's shut out Popplers 4-0 Tuesday in Thief River Falls men's fast pitch softball league play on a one-hit pitching performance by Al Erickson.

Jeff Tunberg broke up Erickson's bid for a no-hitter with a one-out sixth inning single to left field.

Neibauer's scored a pair of runs in the third inning when Nick Neibauer walked and went to third on Roger Cota's base hit. An error on Mike Kvarnlov's ground ball enabled Neibauer to score, and Cota crossed the plate on Tom Neibauer's opposite-field single.

Four Popplers errors and a couple of hits scored two more Neibauer's runs in the bottom of the fifth.

Volleyball Camp To Start On Monday

Mobile Sports volleyball camp, designed for girls entering grades 4-12 this fall, will begin a five-day visit to the Lincoln high school gym Monday.

Openings remain in the camp, which will be operated from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, July 11-15. Registration starts at 8:30 a.m. Monday at the Lincoln gym. Participation fee is $50.

Husband-wife team of Milan and Marie Madar will serve as camp coaches. Milan is a volleyball-gymnastics-track coach at Lakeville high school. Marie has served as an official at the Minnesota state volleyball tournament the past five years.

A native of Czechoslovakia where he played volleyball, coached the sport at the club level and was a member of the country's selection committee for the women's national team, Milan Madar has coached his Lakeville volleyball team to the Region 1AA finals for five consecutive years, earning state tournament berths in 1981 and 1982 where the Panthers collected third place trophies both times. His volleyball coaching record at Lakeville, and New Hope before that, is 163-43.

His son, Milan, Jr., a 1983 Burnsville high school graduate, played on the Braves' state championship soccer team and state runner-up hockey team.

Milan Madar said he became interested in the Mobile Sports Camp program, which visits communities throughout the state during the summer months, because he found it "pleasurable to work with students as a coach. I think of it as a hobby," he said.

For additional information about the camp, contact Lincoln high school volleyball coach Helen Anderson, telephone 681-4922.

Mrs. Clifford Jorde, accompanied by her grandchildren, Mike Jorde and Kim and Kelly Magner from Thornton, Colo., spent Tuesday in Grand Forks visiting at the home of Donn and Sharon St. Germain and Corey.

Our community was well represented in St. Hilaire Sunday afternoon to watch the 100-unit centennial parade. The senior citizen rhythm band, with Alice Brubakken as manager and Ethel Moe and Bernice Vatsaas as members, constituted one of the units. Very favorable reports of the parade have been heard. Lester Halvorson and Harold Halvorson also rode their horses in the parade.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Solem spent the fourth visiting at the home of Mrs. Carrie Solem in Grygla.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Rondorf from Grand Island, Neb., together with his sons Tyson and Jeremy Rondorf of Brainerd, spent a week at Ell, camping and fishing. They arrived at the home of his folks, Mr. and Mrs. LaVerne Rondorf, Saturday and visited relatives over the weekend. Sunday evening they spent a couple hours at the Mrs. Clara Jaennette home. They took the boys home Tuesday and went on to Minneapolis and expect to be home by the end of the week.

Supper guests at the Richard Jorde home the Fourth were Mr. and Mrs. Chuck Granlund and their three daughters of Minneapolis.

Muzzy Has Birthday

Mrs. Anne Muzzy was an honored guest Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Clara Jaennette where Mrs. Arneda Mathieu, Mrs. Linda Merritt, Mrs. Sadie Bugge and Mrs. Marie Fischer, together with Clara, helped her celebrate her 88th birthday. The angel food birthday cake was brought by Mrs. Bugge. We wish Anne a belated happy birthday and hope she can continue enjoying good health for many more years.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Jorde attended her Lincoln high school class reunion banquet at the Elks club Saturday evening.

Dinner guests July 4 at the Harold Halvorson home were Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Larson, Wendy and Heidi and Corey from Oklee, Nick and Debi Drees and Nicholas and Gary Halvorson.

Afternoon visitors the Fourth at the Mrs. Clara Jaennette home were Ned and Dorothy Blodgett and Mr. and Mrs. "Swede" Fellman.

Saugen Home From Trip

Melvin Saugen spent from June 12 to June 26 on a tour sponsored by Farmers' Union, going across the Bad Lands in South Dakota, through Yellowstone National Park and Jackson Hole in Wyoming, and the Teton Mountains. At one point they were 10,030 feet above sea level and experienced cold and snow. They had nice weather all the way and a very enjoyable trip. His roommate was from Oslo, which may be considered close to home. Everything was arranged by the Farmers Union except meals which were paid for individually.

Record Salmon

A new Minnesota record for Atlantic salmon was set during the ninth annual trout and salmon derby on Lake Superior, June 17-19, the Department of Natural Resources announced.

A 12-pound, 8-ounce fish taken by Steven Griep of McGregor surpassed the old record of 8-pounds, 9-ounces caught last year by Mike Chiovitte, a Michigan resident.

Griep's salmon was 37 inches long and had a 17 inch girth.

A total of 1,300 fish were entered in the derby by the 800 participants. Contest entries included two 17-pound lake trout, a 15-pound chinook salmon and a 9-pound steelhead, in addition to the new record Atlantic salmon.

Roy Johannes, DNR fisheries specialist, said the size and number of fish taken indicates the dramatic improvement in Lake Superior sport fishing that has occurred in recent years.

Sportsmen Aid DNR

Members of 17 sportsmens clubs in central Minnesota have donated more than $10,000 toward the purchase of a tractor for use in state wildlife management areas, the Department of Natural Resources reports.

The tractor will be used to improve game habitat on more than 70 of the areas located in the counties of Benton, Morrison, Sherburne, Stearns, Todd and Wright.

Clubs contributing funds included: Big Lake Sportsmens Club, Browerville Sportsmens Club, Foley Sportsmens Club, Little Beaver Archery Club, Little Falls Adult Hunter Education, Little Falls Bowmen Archery Club, Little Falls Sportsmens Club, Rainbow Sportsmens Club, Randall Sportsmens Club, Rice Sportsmens Club, Rockville Sportsmens Club, Royalton-Bowlus Sportsmens Club, Sauk Rapids Sportsmens Club, Sobieski Sportsmens Club, Swanville Sportsmens Club, Tri-County Chapter of Minnesota Waterfowl Association, Wright County Federation of Sportsmens Club.

Regional wildlife supervisor Henry Wulf said, "The clubs have again shown their commitment to game management and their willingness to contribute their own money toward enhancing wildlife populations and improving sport hunting."

He said Evergreen Equipment of Little Falls, where the tractor was purchased, also contributed funds and it is expected that the $4,000 balance remaining on the tractor will be paid through additional donations from sportsmens clubs this summer.

Wulf said the tractor will greatly assist the area wildlife manager on such projects as the planting of native grasses, woody cover and food plots and in the development of wetlands.

No animal on the official endangered species list is hunted, according to the Office of Endangered Species.

Twins' Plans For Promotions Are Announced

First-ever Beer Night at the Metrodome will be held Saturday when the Twins host the Cleveland Indians at 7:35 p.m. All adults entering the stadium that evening will be given two coupons, each of which will be redeemable for a beer.

That game is the middle contest of the first post-All-Star Game series. The Indians, with Toby Harrah, Andre Thornton, Len Barker and new acquisition German Thomas, also appear Friday night at 7:35 and wind up the series at 1:15 on Sunday afternoon. Friday night's game is Family Night, with all reserved and lower deck general admission seats reduced 25 per cent in cost, to $6 and $3; upper deck general admission remain priced at $3.

Always a popular event, Camera Night, is coming up Wednesday, July 13, when the Twins play the New York Yankees at 7:35 p.m.

The event features the giveaway of fifty cameras, which retail at $50 each. Also, everyone attending will receive a special ticket which provides a discount on photo finishing, and the other half of the ticket will be used for the camera drawings (no purchase necessary to win).

And, as in the past, fans will be allowed on the warning track for a half-hour period (6:30-7 p.m.) to take pictures of their favorite Twins' players, who will fan out and walk the circumference of the field.

Yankees will appear at 7:35 the previous two evenings as well (Monday and Tuesday, July 11 and 12).

Krakatau Still Classic Eruption

By William G. Schulz
Smithsonian News Service

Nature gave one of its warnings in late May 1883. The uninhabited, largely ignored island of Krakatau, in the middle of the Sunda Straits between the Indonesian islands of Sumatra and Java, suddenly stirred. Billowing clouds of smoke and booming thunder caused a small shiver of terror among the inhabitants of the nearby islands.

At first, gossip and speculation were fierce among the Dutch colonists, the natives and the sailors whose ships filled the busy straits. Was the old volcano making a last gasp? But as Krakatau continued to belch smoke and ash day after day, nature's sideshow soon became boring and the matter was mostly forgotten.

Three months later, on the morning of August 27, tragedy struck the lush islands. Krakatau exploded, this time with a force so mighty the eruption could be heard 3,000 miles away. Port cities of Java and Sumatra were obliterated by sea waves cresting at heights of more than 120 feet. Chaos reigned as the islands were blanketed by almost total darkness from the volcano's choking ash.

By the time the fury ceased, more than 30,000 people had drowned on the coasts or had been swept helplessly out to sea, all victims of the huge waves — some of the worst tsunami in history. Nearly two-thirds of the five-mile long Krakatau, as if exhausted by its own range, had disappeared, collapsing into a void below sea level.

Recalling his experience on those harrowing two days, an elderly Dutchman later wrote, "My running days have long gone by, but you may be sure that I did my best. In a few minutes I heard the water with a loud roar break upon the shore. Everthing was engulfed. Another glance around showed the houses being swept away and the trees thrown down on every side."

That man and the other survivors are long dead, but 100 years after Krakatau's famed August eruption, the impact is still being felt, say Dr. Tom Simkin and Dr. Richard Fiske, Smithsonian volcanologists who are co-authors of a new book, "Krakatau 1883 — The Volcanic Eruption and Its Effects."

The book compiles eyewitness accounts, first-time English translations of early scientific reports and rare photographs of the eruptions and their related effects. To this end, scientists from many different fields and nations will gather this August in Indonesia at a special centennial symposium on Krakatau.

Krakatau is the "classic" eruption studied by geologists interested in volcanic processes, according to Fiske, who is director of the Smithsonian's national museum of natural-history. It was not the biggest volcanic eruption in history by many standards — for example, the 1815 eruption of Tambora, also in Indonesia, ejected into the atmosphere some 20 cubic miles of volcanic material, compared with a "mere" four cubic miles ejected from Krakatau — but it signified several "firsts" for geologists and other scientists, as well as for the general public.

Scientific expeditions to the volcano soon after the eruption, for instance, made important contributions to the then fledgling field of geology. "Krakatau is where the whole concept of caldera collapse developed," Fiske points out. This collapse, which creates geologic structures such as Crater Lake in Oregon, explains why two-thirds of Krakatau disappeared after the eruption.

Most scientists thought the explosion simply blasted away that part of the island, tossing huge chunks of it northward in the straits where short-lived islands had appeared. But a Dutch geologist, Rogier Verbeek, who studied the volcano seven weeks after the eruption, made an important new discovery.

Verbeek studied the rock on the new islands and found that 95 per cent of it was new volcanic material. He concluded that the missing portion of Krakatau had collapsed into the emptied chamber of magma — molten rock below the Earth's surface. This collapse results in a huge steep-walled basin that geologists call a caldera.

"Geology didn't even have a name at that time for this important process of volcanic activity," Simkin says. "It was a fundamentally different interpretation." Other studies had ignored or overlooked evidence like that gathered by Verbeek, he says.

Although the concept of caldera collapse at Krakatau and elsewhere is clear to geologists today, one of the remaining unknowns is what caused the massive sea waves that battered Java and Sumatra. Simkin speculates that more careful study of data on the eruption will yield this information, but so far, only the mechanisms that produce massive wave action can be identified.

"There are four mechanisms that can cause waves like those at Krakatau," Simkin says. One of these is the successive landslides resulting from the caldera collapse. Considering that the missing portion of Krakatau was the size of a small city and the remaining cliff a sheer 2,700 feet high, it is not hard to understand how the collapse would cause a huge wave.

Another possible cause is the mechanism of an emptied magma chamber collapsing. In essence, such a collapse is a "faulting" motion, below sea level in this case, in which one block of the sea floor suddenly "drops" in relation to a neighboring block and thereby sets a wave in motion.

Source could also have originated above Krakatau, in the huge, rising column of ash. "The bigger blocks of new volcanic material don't go very far until they fall back into the sea," Simkin says, "and that process can cause waves."

Fourth possible mechanism arises with a submarine eruption itself. The explosion, Simkin says, "punches up" a huge swell of water called a water dome. As the dome rises, it expands and radiates outward, and then can reach menacing speeds and heights as it approaches a coastline. "We know every one of these mechanisms took place at Krakatau," he says. "We just don't know which caused the really big waves."

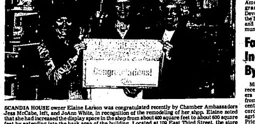
Scientists today still continue to ponder that puzzle. But, "what really caught the attention of the world in 1883 was the atmospheric effects from Krakatau," Simkin says. The volcano shot massive amounts of dust, ash and new volcanic material about 25 miles into the atmosphere. The lighter particles, which naturally stayed aloft longer, were eventually swept into the air currents of the upper limits of the Earth's atmosphere and carried around the globe.

For years after the eruption, they had a prismlike effect on the sun's rays, resulting in brilliantly colored sunsets around the world. For meteorologists, this was first-time proof of air currents high above the clouds. But writers and painters all over the world were also inspired: "For day by day, thro' many a blood-red eve, - the wrathful sunset glared," the famous English poet Alfred, Lord Tennyson wrote of these effects.

Fire departments in places like Poughkeepsie, NY, and New Haven, CT, were not as enraptured as the poets. The sunsets has become so intensely red by the autumn of 1883 that firemen were sent racing into the streets to extinguish what appeared to be massive fires somewhere in the distance.

Krakatau is a classic in one other important sense, Simkin and Fiske say. The eruption happened just a few years after the first undersea telegraph cables revolutionized world communications. People everywhere were, for the first time, reading about a major volcanic eruption almost immediately after it happened and then seeing its effects via the sunsets. While the reports were not always accurate — one unknown reporter wrote that an iceberg flowed out from the volcano's crater — they showed the complex interdependence of land, sea and air. Though the volcano's explosion was not the biggest, as Simkin and Fiske point out in their book, "Krakatau can lay claim to the title of history's most famous eruption."

In 1981, about 3.4 million families maintained by women — 1 in every three — were in poverty, compared with 1 in 16 married-couple families, according to "Women at Work: A Chartbook," published by the U.S. Labor Department.



SCANDIA HOUSE owner Elaine Larson was congratulated recently by Chamber Ambassadors Jess McCabe, left, and JoAnn White, in recognition of the remodeling of her shop. Elaine noted that she had increased the display space in the shop from about 400 square feet to about 600 square feet by extending into the back area of the building. Located at 109 East Third Street, the store specializes in crafts and imported items. The Ambassadors posted signs recognizing the improvements as more progress for Thief River Falls.

Farm Price Index Declines By Two Per Cent

Mid-June index of prices received by Minnesota farmers decreased two per cent from May and was four per cent below a year ago, according to the Minnesota agricultural statistics service. Prices were down from the previous month for most livestock commodities except calves and wool, which were steady, and turkeys, which were up slightly. On the crop commodity side, prices for oats, soybeans, hay and potatoes declined and sunflowers held steady while other crops were higher.

The crops index decreased one per cent to 125 during the month. This was four per cent above the index a year earlier. The mid-June prices and the changes from last month are: All wheat, $3.93 per bushel, up three cents from the May estimate; corn, $2.91, up seven cents; oats, $1.44, down four cents; barley, $2.15, up 21 cents; soybeans, $5.66, down 24 cents; flaxseed, $4.99, up 70 cents; potatoes $3.80 per cwt., down 70 cents.

All hay was down $14 per ton to $63, alfalfa hay at $68 was down $13 and other hay at $45 was down $12. All sunflowers at $9.20 per cwt. were unchanged from the revised May price. Dry edible beans were up 60 cents to $11.30 per cwt.

Meat animal index at 136 was four per cent below last month and 18 per cent below a year ago. All hogs at $44.20 per cwt. were down $2.10 from a month earlier. Beef cattle averaged $51.20 per cwt., down $2.20. Calves were unchanged at $64 per cwt. Sheep brought $10 per cwt., down $2.70. Lambs were down $7 to $55.40 per cwt.

Dairy index decreased one per cent during the month to 145. This was unchanged from the index last year. The preliminary milk price at $12.80 per hundredweight was down seven cents from the revised May price.

Poultry and egg index at 105 was three per cent above last month but three per cent below a year ago. Turkeys were 35 cents per pound liveweight, up three cents from a month earlier. Table market eggs brought 46 cents per dozen for all grades in mid-June, down two cents from mid-May but 3½ cents above a year earlier.

Minnesota is the fourth leading milk-producing state in the nation. Wisconsin is first, followed by California and New York.

Festival Focuses On New Jersey

by Kathryn Lindeman
Smithsonian News Service

Anyone who has basked on the beaches, fished in the waters, hiked in the pinelands or tasted the fresh-picked corn and tomtoes of the garden state knows that there exists in this East Coast industrial giant a rich trove of natural and cultural resources. To those who have partaken of these pleasures, it comes as no surprise that New Jersey was invited to be the featured state at this summer's 17th annual festival of American folklife, sponsored by the Smithsonian Institution and the National park service on the National mall in Washington, DC.

And for people who think that New Jersey is comprised solely of sprawling industrial cities and suburbs and a maze of highways and turnpikes, the festival will showcase the state from far different angles.

"Presenting New Jersey — or, for that matter, any industrial state — at a folklife festival is not incongruous," Diana Parker, associate festival director in the Smithsonian's office of folklife programs, says. "Folklore can be found in any place where peole form groups."

New Jersey's industrial areas, as well as its farmlands, meadows, marshes, sandy beaches and pine forests, have provided these gathering places. Indeed, Parker says, there is folklore aplenty in the garden state. "The problem," she says, "has not been in finding enough new material but in narrowing down what we have."

Festival producers will bring New Jersey craftsworkers, singers, dancers, cooks and industrial workers to the nation's capital to demonstrate some of the diverse traditions surviving in the state. For 10 days, New Jerseyans will join other featured groups — French citizens, French-Americans and other Americans — in presenting their skills at this outdoor event which draws about a million visitors each year.

Invitations to participants in the festival go out from the Smithsonian after scholarly research by fieldworkers who search the featured areas for just the right combination of performers and demonstrators. Because of the state's cultural diversity, it was a challenge for the nine New Jersey fieldworkers to recommend who should be invited. The state's population includes nearly a hundred different ethnic groups, according to some counts, and all kinds of occupations from farmer to seaside hotelier.

"The diversity that is found in the state is the key to what New Jersey is all about," David Cohen, coordinator of the folklife program of the New Jersey historical commission, says.

Mary Hufford, a folklife specialist with the American folklife center at the Library of Congress, was one of the fieldworkers giving the Smithsonian a hand this year. How does she line up candidates?

"First," she says, "you have to read a lot about the area you are searching. Sometimes, you just happen across some brief reference in a book that will lead you to just what you need." Through one chance reference, for example, Hufford was led to the work chanties of the menhaden fishermen. The fishers used to sing these work songs as they pulled in their catch of menhaden, but stopped in the mid-'50s after the introduction of hydraulic lifts to pull up the nets.

"Through my research," Hufford relates, "I found a group of fishermen who still know the songs. They continue to feel the power in the music, but now they just sing them in a different context."

Agriculture can't be overlooked in any study of New Jersey, as the fieldworkers discovered. Today there are more than 30 types of agriculture in the state, from beehives to orchids, asparagus to zuccinin. This diversity, and the fact that New Jersey ranks second in the nation in blueberry production, third in cranberries and summer potatoes and fourth in asparagus, green peppers, peaches and tomatoes for processing, has yielded New Jersey it "Garden State" nickname.

At the festival, more than 20 New Jersey crops, including corn, tomatoes, asparagus and zucchini, will be cultivated in a small section of the greensward between the Capitol and the Washington monument. An Intailan-American family produce stand will offer fresh Jersey fruits and vegetables for sale just as is done from roadside stands at home.

Veteran travelers know it's tough to resist stocking up on fresh produce on the way to the Jersey shore for a week of sun and sand. But there are more beaches found along that extensive shoreline. The maritime traditions of the Jersey shore and the Delaware bay form a significant part of the state's rich cultural resources.

For example, Smithsonian fieldworkers delving into New Jersey's maritime traditions found that several types of boats are indigenous to New Jersey, including the Seabright skiff, a light, graceful surf boat originally used for fishing and now used by lifeguards, and the Barnegat bay sneak box, a shallow-draft duckhunting boat. These two regional variations of coastal craft were developed by New Jereyans in the 19th century to meet specific needs. The festival will bring skiff and sneak-box boatbuilders to the Mall along with lots of other people involved in maritime traditions of the state — including Hufford's menhaden fishermen.

Then there are the many ethnic groups alive and well and living in New Jersey. "New York City is a major port of entry," Cohen, of the New Jersey historical commission, says, "and from the time of the early Dutch, there has been migration to New Jersey from New York and, to a lesser degree, from Philadelphia."

Ukrainians live in Newark, Byelorussians in Monmouth county, Japanese in Seabrook, Cubans in Union City. But the single largest ethnic group in New Jersey is of Italian origin.

"Each ethnic group," Cohen says, "has its own shops, restaurants and specialty stores in its own neighborhood, places that keep the cultural traditions of the group alive, though these traditions change as the people adapt to life in the United States. They maintain their own social clubs, ethnic stores, folk art, commercial art, records, etc."

At the festival, under shade trees, in temporary tents and on open stages, selected ethnic celebrations from New Jersey will be re-created. Cooks will demonstrate how to prepare special traditional dishes, craftsworkers will demonstrate their skills, dancers will teach their steps and singers will teach songs related to the celebration.

"Of course, to look at New Jersey seriously," Parker says, "you must look at industry, because it is so vital to the state's economy today." It's no surprise that New Jersey was one of the first states to industrialize. In 1791, the society for useful manufactures was developed to make Paterson a manufacturing center, close to the natural water power of the falls on the Passaic river.

Eventually, Paterson did become a center for silk production and other industries. Today about 15 silk factories are still spinning and weaving in Paterson, and some silk workers will be on hand in Washington demonstrate warping a loom, weaving and picking. A loom fixer will come along to administer quick repairs inasmuch as, it is said, the loom constantly goes awry.

The occupational folkler of another industry — pharmaceuticals — will be presented by industry workers alongside herbalists who will bring the herbs they use in preventive medicines and home remedies. Pharmacognosists, who study medicines of animal and vegetable origina and act as consultants to pharmaceutical companies, will also be represented.

"New Jersey," Cohen says, "simply defies any simple little stereotype. The recipe for New Jersey if not quite like any other in the country." For travelers who have only glimpsed the state while speeding by on the turnpike, the chance to sample New Jersey's special recipe just may be in Washington, D.C., at the Smithsonian's folklife festival.

PUBLIC NOTICE
The Thief River Falls water utility announced today that the State maximum allowable limit for turbidity in drinking water is being exceeded.
Turbidity is caused by the presence of finely suspended particles such as clay, sand or organic matter in the water. Turbidity can be a problem if it interferes with chlorine disinfection. However, the high turbidity levels, do not create any health hazard because the water utility is able to maintain effective levels of chlorine for disinfection.
The Thief River Falls water utility staff is working closely with State Health Department officials to reduce the turbidity to acceptable levels.
Any citizen seeking additional information should contact Allen Lunn at the Water Plant, phone number 681-3809.

Correction

The name of Alvin Nygard's sister was misspelled in a recent item. It should have read Arlett Nordsletten, not Northland. Also, the name of Darleen Melvie was inadvertently omitted as one of the guests at a dinner held in honor of the Merle Wakefields of Hartland at the Paul Furuseth home two weeks ago. Sorry.

Sympathy Extended

Sincere sympathy is extended to the Merle Wakefield family of Hartland on the sudden and unexpected death of Mrs. Wakefield last Friday evening. The Wakefields had only been home a couple of days following a two week visit with friends and relatives in this area. Ardis was a sister of Mrs. Paul (Iris) Furuseth and Eldred Ayers of Sanders and, a sister-in-law of Eva Ayers. Eldred, Mr. and Mrs. Furuseth and Eva Ayers left early the morning of the Fourth to attend the funeral the following day.

Bartlett pears are a part of summer's bounty, coming into season in August and available into December this year. The next time you entertain, try this versatile cheese ball served with slices of juicy Pacific Mountain Bartlett pears as a light dessert or change-of-pace appetizer.

Cream cheese is accented with the exciting flavor-blend of ginger and orange peel. Crushed pineapple and bright maraschino cherries give a delightful fruity flavor. The cheese ball is coated with finely chopped walnuts, then chilled several hours for full blending of flavors. At serving time, juicy sliced pears surround the cheese ball for a lovely presentation.

Unlike most fruits, Bartletts are best ripened off the tree, and often pears in produce displays will be slightly underripe. They will ripen to a sunny yellow if kept at room temperature for a few days. Once ripe, pears should be stored in the refrigerator until they are used.

Pears With Fruited Cheese Ball

- 1 package (8 oz.) cream cheese, softened
- 1 can (8-1/4 oz.) crushed pineapple, well-drained
- 2 tablespoons chopped maraschino cherries
- 1 teaspoon grated orange peel
- 1/8 teaspoon ground ginger
- 1/2 cup finely chopped walnuts
- Fresh Pacific Mountain Bartlett pears, chilled
- Lemon juice

Combine cream cheese, pineapple, cherries, orange peel and ginger. Chill until firm enough to shape into a ball. Fold in finely chopped walnuts. Refrigerate several hours to blend flavors. Core and slice pears; dip in lemon juice to prevent darkening. Serve cheese ball at room temperature as a spread for pear slices. Makes about 1-1/2 cups spread.

Stangeland Won't Extend Daylight Time

Congressman Arlan Stangeland is working to defeat a bill which would extend daylight saving time for an extra two months. The bill (H.R. 1398) would move the starting date for DST from the last Sunday in April to the first Sunday in March.

"Sponsors of the bill say this would improve safety and increase energy conservation," Congressman Stangeland said. "The opposite result would occur in Minnesota if this is signed into law."

The four-term House veteran noted that dawn is the coldest part of the day.

"If Minnesotans must rise an hour earlier, thermostats will be turned up during the breakfast hour," he said. "That will demolish any energy savings of the bill."

Congressman Stangeland also noted the danger to school children of extending the daylight saving period.

"This would force our children to be on icy roads an hour earlier during the last two months of winter," he said. "Braking conditions are worse, visibility is reduced, and the cold threatens our youngsters' health."

A senior member of the House agriculture committee, Congressman Stangeland noted that the extension would be nonsense for his farm-dominated district.

"It doesn't matter what time the clock on the wall says to our farmers," he noted. "There are only so many hours of sunlight to get into the fields. Congress might just as well pass laws to make it 10 degrees warmer in winter, or to extend good harvest weather through October."

Anti-Viral Drug Curbs Shingles

Medical scientists announced June 16 that a new anti-viral drug called acyclovir effectively stops the spread of shingles in patients with immune system malfunction. Shingles is a sometimes life-threatening condition common in cancer and transplant patients.

In a summary report based on findings at 20 medical centers in the United States and Canada, scientists reported in the current issue of the "New England Journal of Medicine" that: "Acyclovir prevented progressive . . . development of (acute herpes) zoster in a significant number of patients and was also associated with fewer treatment failures."

In most people an attack of acute herpes zoster — commonly known as shingles — causes a rash and intense pain. But in one group of patients — those who are immunocompromised — a shingles attack can lead to damage to internal organs such as the liver, lungs and brain. In some cases the virus is life treatening.

In July 1982 a University of Minnesota research group reported in the English medical journal "Lancet" that intravenous acyclovir accelerates blister healing and pain resolution in patients with normal immune systems.

Dr. Henry Balfour, the head of University of Minnesota hospitals' clinical virology service and senior investigator of both reports, said shinles poses a significant problem in the treatment of cancer patients, as well as those who have received an organ transplant.

"We estimate that 50 per cent of patients with special kinds of cancers, such as Hodgkin's disease, will suffer a shingles attack within a few months to several years following their diagnosis," Balfour said.

"The virus usually results in prolonged hospitalization, but as many as five to 10 per cent of the patients will be affected by deep organ involvement — the liver, lungs and brain. In some cases, the disease can be life threatening," he said.

A smaller percentage of organ transplant patients — probably 10 to 15 per cent — experience shingles, Balfour said.

Multi-center study enrolled a total of 94 patients with approximately half receiving intravenous injections of acyclovir over a period of one week. The remainder of the patients were given a placebo.

"The significance of our findings," Balfour said, "is that the patients who received acyclovir did not suffer any deep organ involvement as a result of the shingles and the virus healed sooner than in the control group."

Although the scientists found that the drug was more effective when treatment was initiated during the first three days after the onset of the shingles rash, Balfour said the anti-viral drug was also helpful in stopping the virus spread in patients enrolled during the later stages of shingles.

"This finding is important for the physician and patient to know because they may feel that it is futile to treat shingles in the later stages of the disease," Balfour said.

Cessation of pain also occurred faster in the acyclovir patients when compared with the control group, according to the study.

Scientists say they still must determine if intravenous injections of acyclovir help patients suffering post-herpetic neuralgia, the long-term pain that follows the shingles attack.

"We conclude that one week of intravenous acyclovir therapy may not be long enough to provide resolution of pain and to prevent post-herpetic neuralgia in some patients," the study said. "Further studies are needed to explore other treatment regimens, perhaps including intravenous acyclovir for several days followed by a course of oral acyclovir."

University of Minnesota hospitals and several other medical centers are exploring the effectiveness of oral does of acyclovir in a controlled double-blind study. Approximately 200 patients, ages 18 and over, will be enrolled in the continuing study during the next two to three years. Participants in the study will have to have had the shingles rash for no more than three days. They will receive the drug as outpatients for 10 days.

"I believe anti-viral drug therapy is effective," Balfour concluded. "Now we have to learn specifically how to use them: how frequently, the specific dosages and over what period of time."

TENNIS TRIVIA

Competition for the Davis Cup was limited to the U. S., England, Australia and New Zealand until 1927 when players from throughout the world were permitted to enter.

Bill Tilden won the U. S. Men's Singles Championship six consecutive times. He held the title from 1920 to 1925, and regained it in 1929.

Great Britain's Michael Sangster holds the record for the fastest serve ever recorded. He was clocked at 154 mph in 1963.

According to Figgie International's Fred Perry division, England's Major Walter Clopton is said to be the "father of modern tennis."

CPA's Advise Keep Hobby Costs Practical

Hobbies are meant to be relaxing diversions that allow you to forget life's harsh realities. But for some, a hobby could induce financial irresponsibility.

In an eagerness to complete a set of stamps or acquire a missing volume, many collectors go overboard in their spending. So if your hobby fills your leisure time but also tempts you to spend the grocery money, here are some guidelines from the Minnesota society of CPAs.

Rule one is to plan your expenses. CPAs suggest applying a business approach to planning your expenses. Find out how much is being spent, using last year's spending as a guide, unless of course your hobby costs nearly pushed you over the brink.

Identify all costs relating to your hobby, not forgetting magazines, club dues or travel costs to hobby conventions. Preplanning has a way of revealing all the essential facts, including easily forgotten out-of-pocket costs. Confronting your total spending can be unnerving, but it could help make you more practical.

Knowing last year's expenditures may lead to economies that could breathe new life into your hobby. For example, you might discover that what you spent buying supplies on a piecemeal basis put a drain on your resources. Opting to buy a full year's worth of glue at once may be a source of wonder to others, but could be a money saver.

For some hobbyists, impulse buying is a terminal disorder. Buying economically, such as a skilled purchase agent does for a business, is beneficial. Like a professional, you can wait for special sales, buy off-season, and plan ahead so purchases can be spread out.

Collectors are probably also better off putting money into fewer items of higher value. CPAs generally agree such an approach adds to the luster of a collection and offers a better potential for increasing the collection's value.

Some collections have a way of generating their own costs. Antique clocks often need replacement parts to keep them ticking. Jewelry requires skilled handwork to correct settings or tighten clasps. Antiques may need special cleaning or restoring.

Storing a collection often poses another challenge. Apart from living space a hobby takes up, some collections require costly protective measures, like photographs which are best stored in acid-free framing materials or plastic sleeves.

An important move is to insure a collection against loss. Insurance agents are more than willing to advise on the best coverage for you. Normally a conventional homeowner or apartment dweller policy protects you against fire or theft. But those policies have limits; they may not cover certain valuables classified as fine art or have dollar maximums for personal items.

CPAs report some clients choose a low cost insurance option that extends coverage through a personal articles floater attached to an existing policy. This can protect against the loss of an entire collection and costs a set amount for each $1,000 of insured value.

Tax laws offer a kind of last resort protection against casualty or theft losses. But the current law limits the amount of loss that qualifies for a tax deduction. The loss now has to exceed 10 per cent of your annual adjusted gross income, after a $100 exemption.

Whatever fate awaits you, it is a good idea to have your collection professionally appraised. Photographs are especially useful when questions of insurance or tax loss crop up.

Disposing of your collection always raises tax issues. If the collection is sold, the gain is subject to federal income tax rules. If donated to an accredited charity or non-profit group and its value is substantiated with written appraisals, it may bring a tax deduction.

CPAs have this parting advice: hobbies can add to the quality of life, as long as the collector remains practical and in charge.

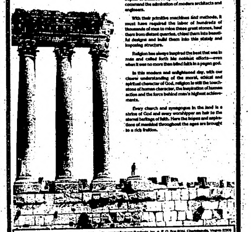
CRUMBLING RUINS



These crumbling ruins of the ancient Temple of Jupiter at Baalbec in Syria, excite the wonder and command the admiration of modern architects and engineers.

With their primitive machines and methods, it must have required the labor of hundreds of thousands of men to mine these great stones, haul them from distant quarries, chisel them into beautiful designs and build them into this stately and imposing structure.

Religion has always inspired the best that was in man and called forth his noblest efforts—even when it was no more than blind faith in a pagan god.

In this modern and enlightened day, with our clearer understanding of the moral, ethical and spiritual character of God, religion is still the touchstone of human character, the inspiration of human action and the force behind man's highest achievements.

Every church and synagogue in the land is a shrine of God and every worshipper an heir to the eternal heritage of faith. Here the hopes and aspirations of mankind throughout the ages are brought to a rich fruition.

Pawnee Legends Focused On Stars

by William G. Schulz
Smithsonian News Service

Searching for life in outer space seems to be a modern pursuit that never ends. Astronomers at Harvard university in Cambridge, MA for example, have set up an elaborate radio receiver in hopes of catching beeps from the beyond. But for many decades — perhaps even hundreds of years — before the dawn of the 20th century, native American astronomers, such as the Skidi Pawnee Indians, did not require proof. They themselves, their legends said, came from celestial bodies. Theirs was a divine obsession.

Although the Skidi's obsession was not "scientific," astronomers like Von Del Chamberlain of the Smithsonian institution's national air and space museum are extremely interested in their knowledge of the heavens. "The Skidi were very much aware, observationally speaking, of what went on around them," Chamberlain says. In the early 1800s, the Skidi may even have collected their star knowledge for all of the 8,000 to 12,000 Pawnee Indians, he believes.

Chamberlain's expertise comes from research for a new book, "When Stars Came Down to Earth," an exploration of Skidi cosmology. He has pieced together evidence both from astronomy and anthropology illustrating how the stars permeated the entire Skidi culture. "What we forget today," he says, "with all our air-conditioned and lighted rooms, is the significance of the starry sky."

The star-encrusted heavens were not lost on the Skidi. Their mythology suggests that the Skidi band was the offspring of the human children of its star gods. Of course, other cultures have had their gods; Bering Sea Eskimos, for example, told of a raven that swooped down on Earth to create all life, including "First Man." The Skidi, however, believed the first human, a girl, was the child of Evening star and Morning star, two of their primary deities, who journeyed across the skies to mate. The sun and moon gave birth to the first male child. A creation story based on stars "is unusual, as far as I know, in all cultures," Chamberlain says.

Origins of the Skidi, a small band of the Pawnee Indians, are uncertain. Studies of the Skidi language suggest that their culture dates from as early as the mid-1500s. At some point, Chamberlain says, they may have drifted away from other Plains Indian groups to be "adopted" by existing Pawnee Indians. Whatever the case, they eventually settled in parts of Nebraska, where they hunted buffalo and grew crops, mostly corn.

Evening star, or Bright star as she was also known, watched over these pursuits as the Skidi goddess of agriculture. In the west, she tended a beautiful garden teaming with buffalo and ripening grain. Along with other evidence, the band's mythology related to her brightness is consistent enough that most modern scholars agree she was the planet Venus.

Tirawahat, the supreme Pawnee god, manifested himself through Evening star to the people of Earth. For this task, Evening star used her messenger assistants, lightning, cloud, thunder and wind, because these elements of a storm were said to be Tirawahat's preferred means of communication.

According to Pawnee legend, Tirawahat placed Morning star in the sky first. Morning star, probably the planet Mars, was a powerful god, a warrior, who could drive other sky people (stars) across the heavens. Anthropological records suggest that, from time to time, Morning star would journey to the west, where he would reunite with Evening star to remind the Skidi of their origins.

Mars does, in fact, journey across the sky once every 2.2 years, and, in conjunction with Venus' appearance — something that happens in the western evening sky about every six-and-a-half years — the two planets do stand together. "The mythology of the journey is so deeply engrained that you can build a good case that Morning star is Mars," Chamberlain says.

"Skidi belief in such awesome gods," he adds, "was so deep-seated that they even, at one time, made human sacrifices to Morning star." But, he says, these were performed infrequently — perhaps to appease the gods during times of disease, drought or famine — and were not clearly based on any particular astronomical phenomena.

Natural happenings celebrated with rituals by many native-American cultures included the solstices, which occur twice yearly when the sun is farthest north of the equator (summer) or farthest south of the equator (winter). While the Skidi did not celebrate the solstices, the band did seem to recognize their occurrences. Four support poles of the Skidi houses were aligned with four stars symbolic of northeast, northwest, southeast and southwest — the approximate intercardinal directions of a compass. The poles may have been markers representing the span of rising and setting positions of the sun and planets on the horizons, between the north-south extremes.

Furthermore, the entryway to Skidi "earth lodges" — igloolike structures made of mud, grass and wooden poles — traditionally faced east. In Chamberlain's view, this may have been symbolic of their concept that the sun entered the Earth's atmosphere each day on the eastern horizon. During the equinoxes, when the sun crosses the equator from the south (spring) or from the north (autumn), this alignment allowed early morning sunlight to fall on a carefully placed buffalo-skull altar.

Springtime was the start of the Skidi ceremonial year and an occasion for festivities. The events, though, were not signalled by the equinox. Sometime in early February, Chamberlain explains, priests watched for the first early morning appearance of two stars, the "swimming ducks," located near the Milky Way in the constellation we know as Scorpius. When they saw these stars rising before dawn, the priests knew it was time to begin waiting for the first sound of thunder, a sure sign of spring, usually heard in early March on their lands. Then, the sacred bundles — packages of religious objects — were taken from storage and the rituals began. Chamberlain believes that the Skidi viewed nature as a harmonious whole and thought of the weather as connected to the movements of the stars.

Other events in the sky were important to the Skidi, although, as with most information about their culture, only sketchy details are available today. Long feather headdresses, for example, apparently symbolized the tail of a comet. Meteorites were associated with Morning star and thought to provide protection to warriors. No actual meteorite has even been recovered from the Skidi, however. Chamberlain tells of two objects, obtained by researchers around the turn of the century from one of the last Skidi Indians, that were thought to be meteorites but were actually "meteor-wrongs" — a fossil and a hunk of iron pyrite.

Nonetheless, the Skidi kept these prized objects in their sacred bundles. Attached to one bundle, acquired by the field museum of natural history in Chicago during the early 1900s, was an elaborate star chart. Made of buckskin, the chart shows many star and sky features important to the Skidi, including the Milky Way.

While not an accurate depiction of the sky, the chart was important for use in rituals, such as those taking place before each year's two major buffalo hunts, one in spring, the other in winter. The chart, Chamberlain speculates, could also have been used to teach the people about the power and importance of the star gods. But by 1900, white settlement of the West had taken its toll. The total Pawnee population had dwindled to about 600 people, and their sky lore and other traditions were rapidly fading from their culture. Today, the Pawnee people, now living in Oklahoma, number about 1,000.

Chamberlain regrets that, compared with the Pawnee, the average person today shows little interest in astronomy. "Ironically," he says, "this situation exists at a time when scientists are gaining more knowledge about our universe than ever before. Modern life simply is not conducive to sitting beneath a dark sky, watching stars." While the Skidi were not scientists or naturalists by any modern standards, Chamberlain is intrigued "more than anything else by the apparent way in which they approached the observable universe around them. I think it's too bad that today most people have lost touch with the environment we still have."

ELECTRICITY facts and figures

Benjamin Franklin became interested in the study of electricity about 1746. He developed the theory that electricity consisted of a single fluid. In 1752, he performed his famous experiment of flying a kite in a storm. He showed the world that lightning is electricity.

Any electric current is made up of electrons, among the smallest known particles. In a 60-watt light bulb, for example, about three billion billion electrons a second flow past any point in the wires to the bulb. These electrons travel from atom to atom in the wires at a speed of a few inches every second. Electrical energy, however, or the ability of electricity to do work, travels through a wire almost as fast as the speed of light which is 186,282 miles a second.

These days, atomic energy is often used to generate electricity. A U.S. nuclear power plant, the Vermont Yankee station in Vernon, Vermont, was the world's top operating General Electric-supplied boiling water reactor in 1982, according to energy experts. This ten-year-old, 537 megawatt BWR nuclear plant operated at 93.3 percent capacity factor in 1982. If the plant ran non-stop, 24 hours a day for the entire year, its capacity factor would be 100 percent.

In the electric industry, availability refers to the amount of time a plant is on-line to deliver electric power. The 36 GE-supplied BWRs in commercial operation worldwide averaged 70 percent availability and a 61 percent capacity factor in 1982. The ten-year-old Muhleberg nuclear station in Switzerland achieved a 90.5 percent capacity factor last year. That unit has averaged 89 percent availability and 84 percent capacity — the best cumulative reliability of any of the world's 62 operating BWRs.

Ownership Of Wild Animals Is Discouraged

By Julianne Chappell
Smithsonian News Service

"Wild animals should be left in the wild, and exotic animals should be left in exotic places and in zoos," Tim Donovan, spokesman for the American veterinary medical association, says.

He reflects the official position of his organization and other major humane organizations in this country, including the Humane Society of the United States and the American Humane Association. Such organizations generally agree that laws should be passed making it illegal for private individuals to own any animals which live naturally in a wild state anywhere in the world.

Veterinary association, Donovan says, is primarily concerned with public health. Some species, such as skunks, raccoons, bats, foxes, opossums and other mammals, can transmit diseases such as rabies, which is fatal. Even some normally unsuspected creatures, like turtles, can present a hazard. Healthy turtles may carry salmonella, bacteria which cause several serious conditions in humans and other warm-blooded animals.

Sue Pressman, director of captive wildlife for the humane society of the United States, voices another concern: "We have concluded that wild animals suffer in the hands of amateurs, no matter how caring and loving people try to be. And when people find out they can't care for wild and exotic animals, what happens? The wild ones, if turned loose, usually die because they can't readjust to the wild. People try to give the exotic ones to zoos, but the zoos won't take them. The national zoo has one of the toughest policies against accepting cast-offs."

"That's exactly right," acknowledges Dr. Dale Marcellini, curator of herpetology (reptiles and amphibians) at the National zoological park in Washington, D.C. "Zoos are not boarding houses, and in most cases animals raised in captivity are not acceptable to zoos." Marcellini points out, however, that he doesn't go as far as the humane societies in wanting to ban the private ownership of all wild and exotic animals. Many threatened species are already protected by local or federal laws. Beyond that kind of regulation, "we would like to see ownership controlled rather than prohibited. People might be required to understand the species they want to own, demonstrate that they can care for the animals properly and then earn an ownership permit. This is done for falcons and other birds of prey. It doesn't prevent people with a serious interest from owning animals, but it discourages the rest."

Judith White, the national zoo's education officer, says that the zoo tries in general to discourage private ownership. "In most cases, we know that the animals and the people would be better off apart. We also know that every captured wild animal sold represents the top of a pyramid of animals which die during capture or on the way to market."

In that case, why shouldn't wild and exotic animals be banned as pets?

"That would take away all opportunities for responsible people who want to pursue legitimate hobbies," White explains. "Many of the zoo's best keepers (the experts who take care of zoo animals) owned wild and exotic animals as children. Trooper Walsh can give a more complete answer."

Walsh is a keeper in the national zoo's reptile and amphibian house and has logged thousands of hours with what many consider repulsive creatures, starting when he was six years old.

"My dad brought home a baby crocodile and a water snake from the wild when we lived in Georgia," Walsh recalls. "He had a large aquarium built, and we assumed they ate fish and frogs. Not much was known at that time about how to take care of these animals, so we had to learn by observing them and studying the places where they live."

Walsh also learned another kind of lesson. "I learned that you can only give so much emotionally to animals like these, because they can't love you back. They aren't the kind of pets the humane societies make posters about."

He stresses that "many collectors around the country put everything into caring for and studying their animals. They often contribute more to our knowledge about those species than a zoo could ever hope to do."

Walsh encourages anyone with a serious interest in wild animals to pursue it. He says he came to the national zoo as a child, and a keeper helped him, "I want to do the same for children today. I want them to have the same opportunities I had. My motivation for keeping reptiles may not have been the best at first (he liked their repulsive image), but with my dad's help, it developed into a healthy curiosity. It's mainly the responsibility of parents to make sure owning a pet is a healthy experience for a child — no matter what kind of animal is involved."

One of every six families was maintained by a woman in March 1982, according to "Women at Work: A Chartbook," published by the U.S. Department of Labor.

Business Climate Still Issue

Following editorial is from the Hastings Gazette and its message is applicable to nearly any Minnesota community:

The state legislature goes home with a mixed bag of legislation under its belt.

The major issue of our business climate still looms high in my book and it will need more time and effort in the next session.

But the legislators have dealt with the economic problems of state government. I doubt whether we'll see major unexpected shortgalls in money.

In doing this, the state will also raise about $1 billion in new taxes.

But the issue that worries me most is the business climate. It is unfortunate that this issue has to be so involved in partisan politics. It seems to me it's an issue that should concern all of us and we ought to work together to solve it.

This issue also comes much closer to home. . . Hastings. . . than most of us might think.

We don't just have to worry about states like North and South Dakota stealing our business.

In reading newspapers from other states, I get really concerned when states like Arizona want to do more to attract business like building more colleges to lure the computer industry. A state like that already has a good tax climate and climate (and weather climate) working for it. Yet, they are doing more.

Some will dismiss the cries from business as just being greedy business people who want to make more profits and cry alot about the taxes they pay.

In general, I don't think that is the case.

All of the businesses in this state have to compete. Cost of doing business is a major factor in this competition.

If it's cheaper for their competition to do business, then that means their competition has a price advantage.

We don't have to go too far from home to look at this.

Look at Smead Manufacturing. Peavey, Hudson, Profile Extrusions.

These companies compete outside of our area states and even outside the United States.

An informal survey from these folks as to how they like doing business in Minnesota might bring some interesting answers. I dare say the same type of "cries" we've been hearing from other business in this state.

What if the above named companies were no longer doing business in Hastings? Does this issue strike closer to home?

The competition does not just come from other states. It comes from other countries. The local companies I've listed can tell you about foreign competition.

The reform bill on workman's compensation was a small start.

I find it hard to believe that the legislature next year is really ready to address, in a positive way, the business climate issue.

It truly bothers me. I look five and ten years down the road and I don't like what I see.

I think the "quality of life" here in Minnesota is taking small steps downward. They are small to be sure. . . but they are steps.

I do know that without business and industry we lose our tax base. These business people pay plenty in taxes in our state. They supply jobs. Without them, we have none of the above.

Judging from the strangle hold labor has on the legislature, I doubt much will be done.

There is an attitude in organized labor that is hard to understand. It appeared in the workman's compensation issue. They really weren't prepared to agree that it really needs some reforms. Their attitude seemed to be to get everything they can and to hell with tomorrow.

I would think it would make sense to organized labor to encourage business to stay in Minnesota. It would also seem to make sense to do all they can to encourage more business into the state. That would mean more union members and a stronger union.

It seems to me that this business climate issue should be one in which everyone is working together.

The issue bothers me greatly. It will become even more of a bother as the years slip by and there are fewer expansions in the state and virtually no new business coming in.

People all around us are not standing still. They're moving to keep and get new business. I don't think we are and we are going to pay for it.

The Seniors' Lament

Following poem is by an unknown author and was submitted to us by a reader some time ago — but we forgot where we put it:

Just a line to say I'm living, that
I'm not among the dead—
Though I'm getting more forgetful and mixed up in the head.
For sometimes I can't remember when I stand at the foot of the stairs.
Should I go up for something or did
I just come down from there.
And before the frig, so often my poor mind is filled with doubt.
Did I just put something in or have
I come to take some out.
And there are times when it is dark out and my night cap on my head.
I don't know if I'm retiring or just getting out of bed.
So if it's my turn to write you there's no need of getting sore.
I may think that I have written and don't want to be a bore.
So remember that I love you and wish that you were here.
And now it's nearly mail time so I must say "Good Bye, Dear."
So now I stand beside the mailbox with my face so very red.
Instead of mailing you my letter,
I have opened it instead.

Humans Are Immeasurable

Following was written by Lois Willette of the Olivia Times Journal:

Human beings are not at all orderly, which is what makes life so chancy and interesting. A precise mind must despair over the way people do not play out their lives in strict patterns. All of us are square pegs in round holes.

No matter what time is set for a meeting, some will come early and some will come late. No matter how carefully a teacher or a photographer lines up a row of persons, some will wiggle out of kilter.

Aside from a few soreheads who deliberately mismanage themselves, most of the world has every intention of following directions, but somehow we often miss the mark. That's because each of our measurements is different from someone's else's measurements.

A precisionist would have us measure distances in miles and blocks and inches, but we often don't. When you ask how far it is to Minneapolis, for example, most will say two hours, rather than 100 miles. Rural friends say they live three and a half or eight minutes from Olivia, and you may never know how many miles it is.

We know how far we live, or work, from the post office in walking minutes but would be rather pressed to say how many blocks it is.

People who sew can spot five-eighths of an inch anywhere but ask them to measure one inch and they probably can't.

Our pioneer ancestors measured their work day by "can see to can't see" and we pretend to measure work days by hours. Yet we often talk of long days and short days, even when they are the same number of hours, thereby allowing our emotions to foul up the measurement.

Ask me how long a ball point pen lasts, and I'll say about a year, if hidden. If taken to school by a child, one day.

How long does it take to brew a pot of tea? As long as it takes to sweep the kitchen floor.

After living with a clothes washer for roughly 25 years, I still don't know how long it takes to wash a batch of clothes. But I know how many pages I can type in the same length of time.

How does your mind picture a year? Is it a calendar with January at the top and December at the bottom? Is it a circle intersected by seasonal lines? Is it a color with red for the hot months and blue for the cold months?

Scientists can measure everything in the world, except people, and that's because people themselves do not measure space or time according to standard measurements.

So we conclude that of all things in the world, whatever is immeasurable is human.

Borrowed Nonsense:

When the furnace in a small factory broke down, employees were sent home with the message that they would be informed when it was repaired and a company car would call for them. One employee who had no phone left the number of a neighbor.

A short time later an ashen-faced and shaking neighbor arrived at the door, all out of breath. "Somebody left a message for you," he puffed. "They said the heat is on and they're sending somebody out to get you!"

Excellence in Education

"If an unfriendly foreign power had attempted to impose on America the mediocre education performance that exists today, we might well have viewed it as an act of war. . . We have, in effect, been committing an act of unthinking, unilateral, educational disarmament."

-Commission on Excellence in Education

When Terrel Bell became Secretary of Education, he was concerned about "the widespread public conception that something is seriously remiss in our education system."

So he created the "Commission on Excellence in Education" to examine the quality of education in the United States.

As you probably know, the Commission's findings caused quite a stir, as the above quotation would indicate. Frankly, I'm still digesting the Commission's conclusions. You might be surprised to know that the Commission focused on far more than merit pay (although, that is certainly a hot topic).

I'd like to take a minute here to discuss some of those findings, and would like to ask your opinions in return. (As always, feel free to write me — c-o U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20510.)

The report backs up its dismal conclusions with statistics, such as:

+ 23 million Americans are functionally illiterate;

+ today's high school students score lower on standardized tests than students did when Sputnik was launched 26 years ago; and

+ SAT (College Board's Scholastic Achievement Tests) scores have declined steadily since 1963. The number and proportion of students with exceptionally high SAT scores has declined dramatically.

I think we all agree that our educational system has not remained on the steady upward path we had come to expect and that some reappraisal of our educational system has become imperative. Certainly part of this problem is due to the evolving and conflicting demands on the schools to solve personal, social, and political problems.

While I think "A Nation at Risk" is an overstatement for the sake of argument, I do believe the Commission's report should serve to focus a general sense of discontent with our education system. That is a useful purpose. The Commission is quick to point out (and I would be too) that we should unify to find a solution to the problem and not search for scapegoats among the victims, especially teachers.

The Commission discussed four major areas: curriculum, expectations, time and teaching.

To research curriculum, the Commission compared course patterns of high school students in 1964-1969 to those in 1976-1981. It found that secondary school curricula have been "homogenized, diluted, and diffused to the point that they no longer have a central purpose." This "cafeteria style curriculum," the Commission reported, had led to students mistaking the appetizers and desserts for the main course.

Regarding expectations, it seems to me the conclusion is that we are expecting less of students in school today, particularly high school, and consequently getting less, in terms of effort and hard work.

The Commission defined "expectations" as the knowledge, abilities and skills students should possess along with the time, hard work, behavior, self-discipline, and motivation that are essential for student achievement. The Commission based its findings on the expectations being conveyed to students through grades, graduation requirements, mastery examinations, college admissions requests, and by the difficulty of subject material. The report indicates deficiencies were found in all these areas. As the amount of homework has decreased, grades have risen. College admission selectivity declined during the 1970s. Expenditures for textbooks and other instructional materials has dropped by 50 per cent in the last 17 years.

The use of time made by American schools and students received similar low marks from the Commission. It found that U.S. students spend much less time on school work than students from other nations, and the time spent on homework and in the classroom is often used ineffectively. Moreover, schools are not doing enough to help students develop study skills to help them study well, according to the Commission.

The report indicated that the teaching profession is no longer attracting enough of the best students ("academically able"). According to the Commission, too much of the curriculum for teachers is courses in "education methods" at the expense of courses on the subject matter to be taught. It found also that the professional working life of teachers is unacceptable; salaries are too low and teachers have little to say over important decisions like textbook selection. Also, a serious shortage of teachers was found in key subject areas, particularly math and science.

Peach Cobbler an American Classic

Peach cobbler, like peach buckle, peach fool or pandowdie have been created by cooks with a lot of creativity and a sense of humor, too. The fact that they're still enjoyed today is a tribute to their goodness. This peach cobbler is a classic version from the makers of Karo corn syrup.

PEACH COBBLER

- 2 pounds peaches, peeled, sliced (about 4 cups)
- 1 tablespoon corn starch
- ¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
- ½ cup Karo light corn syrup
- Biscuit Topping (recipe follows)

Place peaches in 1½-quart casserole dish. In small bowl stir together corn starch and nutmeg. Gradually stir in corn syrup until smooth. Pour over peaches; toss to coat evenly. Bake in 400°F oven 20 minutes. Drop Biscuit Topping by spoonfuls onto hot fruit mixture. Bake 25 to 30 minutes longer or until golden brown. Makes 8 servings.

Biscuit Topping: In bowl stir together 1 cup unsifted flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt. With pastry blender or 2 knives cut in 2 tablespoons corn oil margarine until coarse crumbs form. In bowl stir together ¼ cup milk, 2 tablespoons Karo light corn syrup and ½ teaspoon grated lemon rind. Stir into flour mixture just until blended.

THE VOICE of BUSINESS

by Richard L. Lesher, President
U.S. Chamber of Commerce

The Wisdom of Big Brother

There is an old joke that warns us that we can always know we are being lied to if we hear the following: "The check is in the mail" or "Hello, I'm from the federal government and I'm here to help you."

The second phrase has become a cruel joke to many Americans on the receiving end of federal "kindness." Minorities and lower-income Americans have been particularly hard hit by such smothering attention from "compassionate" social engineers headquartered in our nation's capital.

This has been highlighted by a recent report of the Interstate Commerce Commission which found that since the bus and trucking industries have begun deregulation, more than 50 new minority-owned bus companies and 300 minority trucking firms have started operations. This represents a doubling of minority bus companies and a three-fold increase for minority truckers.

The tragedy is that for more than 40 years an untold number of enterprising minorities were kept from fully employing their talents and initiative by those well-meaning bureaucrats on the Potomac.

Ivan the Paper Pusher

This year Americans will spend 1.1 billion hours filling out federally required paperwork. More than a billion hours lost to productive work. While this burden remains a tremendous drain on the economy, it represents progress for President Reagan's efforts when compared with the 1.5 billion "burden hours" imposed by the federal government in 1980.

Now word comes from the Soviet Union that things could always be worse. In a rare burst of candor, the Soviet Union has admitted that their centrally planned economy produces more than 800 Billion (Billion with a B) pieces of paper each year. That translates to more than 7,000 documents for every factory and office worker in Russia — or 28 forms per worker each and every day.

Pity poor Ivan. If he isn't hauled off to the Gulag or some mental hospital for thinking impermissible thoughts he risks bleeding to death from paper cuts.

'Did I Say That?

When speaking before television cameras or congressional hearings, Kenneth Blaylock, president of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE), paints a picture of the underpaid and unappreciated federal employee.

Blaylock is self-righteous on his condemnation of those who point out that federal bureaucrats often receive better pay and pension benefits than the taxpayers who finance them. He ridicules such assertions as ill-formed and mean-spirited.

However, speaking to fellow union leaders behind closed doors, Blaylock displays a better understanding of the exorbitant perks his union members receive. Transcripts of private union meetings which were recently released to the press reveal Blaylock admitting that during meetings with the council that advises the federal government on pay policy the union has been "talking out of both sides of its mouth."

He goes on to admit that "there are two or three levels. . . where the federal pay on a nationwide basis, really, in a lot of areas is higher than the same skill level in the private sector."

Now, if he would only repeat that for the cameras.

The Spending Elevator Goes Up, Not Down

Politicians in Washington are fond of telling the taxpayers each year that they have produced a "bare-bones" budget. (This year's federal budget will weigh in at a "fighting trim" $807 billion. Plus change.)

These politicians were no doubt surprised to learn from Congressman Hank Brown of Colorado that the taxpayers were paying $169,000 each year to pay the salaries of 14 elevator operators who operate automatic elevators — elevators designed so as not to require an operator. Congressman Brown thought it would make sound budget sense to eliminate these unnecessary positions.

Representative Barber Conable of New York agreed, observing that "invariably the operated elevators are slower than the self-operated elevators that do not have operators in them."

However, when the vote was taken, our representatives in Washington voted 193 to 101 against saving the taxpayers $169,000. One hundred, thirty-eight congressmen were absent from the vote; busy, perhaps, on the elevators, taking the American taxpayer for another ride.

There are 65 Nature Conservancy preserves in Minnesota, most of which are accessible and free and open to the public for activities such as birdwatching and photography.

STRAIGHT TALK

Albert D. Hattis, Associate Professor of Business and Holder of the Schwan Endowed Chair for Free Enterprise, Southwest State University, Marshall

During this visit to Washington, one example illustrates how we sometimes are like a herd of cattle, easily conned into reacting without thinking. On the other hand, where something important is involved costing us thousands of extra dollars, and no one is "directing traffic," we sit back and wait to be taken.

It has been estimated that the Internal Revenue service found more than 18,000,000 Americans not reporting all of their earned interest and dividends. Tax returns were compared with federal forms that banks, savings and loans and corporations are required to send to both receivers of interest and dividends and the IRS.

A decision was made to solve the problem by deducting 10 per cent of the dividends and interest paid, excluding the elderly and those who don't earn enough to pay taxes. This 10 per cent deduction would insure that something is collected from the law breakers. When they do not pay, that means bigger deficits, more interest expense and higher tax burdens and inflation for everyone else.

Banks, savings and loans and companies conducted a campaign to get the withholding stopped before it started. One Senator told me that his mail, normally about 500 letters each week, zoomed up to 50,000 per week during this effort, for more than 150,000 letters in three weeks. The Senator tried to get the fads out to his public, but they had been so smothered with propaganda that he finally caved in to the pressure and voted to eliminate the withholding.

A year ago I mentioned that a series of government actions were going to double and triple our phone bills and eliminate the high quality of service that we have in the United States. For more than a decade, the government had been trying to break up AT&T, the company with single responsibility for long distance, local service and equipment, which has held telephone service costs down lower than what other nations' experience.

Because AT&T-Ma Bell has always produced good equipment, service breakdowns are minimal. Whenever there has been a national bad weather problem, the Bell companies have shared maintenance crews and restored our service quickly. With an overall exceptional operating and financial record, AT&T was able to borrow money at the lowest rate, reducing debt service charges. AT&T service has been a miracle that few of us fully appreciate because it was always available.

A year ago, Uncle Sam worked out a system for breaking AT&T into separate independent operating companies, manufacturing facilities, long distance, research and engineering entities. The subsidies for local service by long distance service will end. Overhead will rise as each separate company builds up staff. Borrowing costs will skyrocket as each company arranges its own financing. The equipment competition will produce junk phones on which we can not rely.

The whole idea of breaking up AT&T if it provided lousy or expensive service might have been justified. But when you have something working so well, why tinker with it? A few years ago we started letting junk equipment competitors with no maintenance responsibility try to knock out top notch Western Electric gear. Then we pushed Ma Bell into selling its long distance service to companies who would subcontract out that same service at a discount.

The end result of all of this is that you and I will shortly begin to see the doubling and tripling of our telephone service cost. Many of us will no longer be able to afford this vital service. It just doesn't make sense and the breakup of AT&T should be stopped right now!

No one is fighting this battle for you to keep AT&T together because AT&T will be more profitable in many pieces than one unit, so the company favors a breakup. The individual operating companies like the idea because they will be independent. The competitive equipment suppliers like the idea, as well as those providing so-called discount long distance service, because they look for bigger profits. The only one who will be hurt is the telephone user — you and me.

We were willing to write tens of thousands of letters to help the tax cheaters keep cheating by not reporting interest and dividends. We are not willing to do anything to keep our phone cost reasonable and our phone service at a high quality level. Sounds stupid? It is! It's one of the reasons that many Washingtonians wonder whether the folks out in the rest of the country are smart enough to govern themselves or come in out of the rain. The time for screaming to your congressman in a letter is right now, not after your phone bill arrives up 300 per cent.

That's Straight Talk!

Attending a convention in Washington, I met an interesting man, an example of what can happen in a free society. That man is now a senator from Minnesota.

The story starts in Berlin, Germany, in 1930, and moves to the United States when Rudy Boschwitz was five. This move wasn't easy, because the family had everything it owned in the "old country", and leaving meant losing a lot. The family settled in a New York City suburb, and started rebuilding in the midst of the worst depression in our nation's history.

Rudy attended a university, got a law degree, practiced law, and served in the army. He then decided to become a small businessman, first in Oshkosh, WI, and then in the Twin Cities in Minnesota. He took over an old railroad building and started Plywood Minnesota, a mass merchandiser of paneling, cabinets and carpet that grew in 15 years to include 68 warehouse stores in eight states.

As a retailer, Rudy conducted consumerism campaigns, including his one-company effort at keeping prices from skyrocketing through the imposition of a price freeze and the dropping of suppliers who would not cooperate.

He is a Senator who understands the businessman, his problems and needs, because he was there. He got elected in a campaign that took a businessman-lawyer, known for his commercials and charitable causes, and pit him against a massive effort by a long time majority party in his state. He was an underdog who worked and won, and had to do it "the hard way."

Earlier I met another extremely interesting Senator who achieved success through hard work and under tough circumstances. He was attending a university during the depression of the 1930's. He was paying his own way through school without family help. He had businesses on campus all during his college career that provided the funds needed for school and to help his family. When he completed that education, I am told, no job offer provided as much income as he was then earning on his own.

He joined Bell & Howell as a trainee in 1938 with only an interruption for navy service. He was a corporate officer by 1941, president by 1949, and chief executive officer by 1951.

In 1949, this Senator to be, Charles Percy of Illinois, was one of the 10 outstanding young men selected by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce. He became involved in politics and a pack of worthy organizations. He ran for governor of Illinois and lost. He then took on a campaign for the Illinois Senate seat occupied by a very popular man, Paul Douglas, a former professor from Per[illegible], the University of Chicago. No one I knew believed that Chuck Percy had a chance against Paul Douglas.

To top everything off, an intruder into the Percy home killed one of his children, which knocked him out of active campaigning in what was an uphill political campaign. Against all odds and problems, Charles Percy continued to fight for that Senate seat, speaking everywhere and anywhere. Conservatives thought he was too liberal and liberals thought he was too conservative, which made the fight against Douglas even tougher, since he was a long time liberal who had gained substantial respect.

The campaign progressed and in 1966, Charles Percy was elected to the Senate, and he has been reelected twice.

Here are two Senators who both started out with big odds against their success. They participated in the free enterprise system, which gives everyone a good chance, and they have been successful. Being a Senator has probably cost each of these men a lot of money, and imposed a much harder work schedule than continuing in their old jobs. Both seem to feel that you owe something to the system and the nation. Their participation in political process clearly indicates that they are paying their dues.

It's good to know there are people willing to sacrifice to make the system and country work better.

That's Straight Talk!

I receive many reader letters, but one from a penitentiary inmate deserves a response.

This prisoner claims that he is in jail for refusing to waive his rights and honor Karl Marx by reporting his income on a Form 1040. He feels that any taxes we pay are a formalized robbery and that Americans file income tax returns out of fear of being jailed. He then says, "Free people do not fear their servants, they fire them!"

He also says that anyone accepting "legal tender" (the term used on our currency) is being robbed of whatever the legal tender is buying. The lack of effective control of the value of our money, so that inflating of our "legal tender" steals billions from us, he claims, is the biggest crime, and our politicians are our biggest crooks. What bothers him is that these politicians are walking the streets while he and other petty thieves are filling our prisons to overflowing.

His comments on democracy are interesting. He says, "Democracy is majority rule whether the majority is good or bad. A lynch mob is democracy in action." He refers to both the Bible and the constitution to prove that democracy is illegal and immoral.

He says that more than 200 million Americans believe that government spends too much money, which contributes to inflation, but that our politicians are so unresponsive that they do not react except to increase their salaries, expense reimbursement, pensions and welfare benefits.

The devaluation of our money, through inflation, as he sees it, has created a very sophisticated system of slavery. Our politicians have convinced us that paper is valuable and money, and he thinks all who accept such paper are slaves, because the paper has no initial value and goes down in value every day.

This prisoner closes with some comments on his trial. As he recalls, the United States attorney who prosecuted him told the court that the income tax and reporting was voluntary. An IRS agent, under oath, he says, also emphasized that the income tax was voluntary. Therefore, he claims that he is serving time in a federal penitentiary for not volunteering.

There was much more in his letter, but I think that this very clever and sophisticated guy missed the point. Our country is celebrating its 207th birthday this year. All of us, including this prisoner, experience certain rights and benefits here that very few human beings enjoy anywhere else in the world. As this prisoner's letter demonstrated, written in a prison cell, we all have the ability to speak and write what we please (as long as we do not injure others). We have the right to make decisions on our personal lives. We have the right to participate in our government.

When that government does not perform as we want it to do, we have the right to organize campaigns for candidates who will carry through on what we want, if our will represents the majority of those willing to vote.

Without meaning to "pun," I believe that this prisoner's comments are a "cop out." He has taken the easy route instead of working within our free institutions to try and achieve his objectives. He also must realize that freedom imposes responsibilities, including the willingness to accept the majority view, within the special constraints of our constitutional rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Because he didn't like the way the freedom game is played, he did what "spoiled kids" have been doing for years, he took his bat, ball and glove and went "home" rather than continue participating in the fight for freedom.

I am glad to be an American enjoying freedom on my Uncle's 207th birthday. I am also willing to pay my dues for that freedom, including all forms of taxes, participation in government, service in the armed forces in emergencies (determined by the elected government and not by me), and toleration of the views of those who don't necessarily agree with me.

I know that freedom and a free society may not appear to be as efficient as a dictatorship, but I don't want to be a barnyard animal with only those rights that the dictator is willing to give me, and which he can withdraw whenever he wishes.

I know that the retention of freedom and our rights is not cheap, that freedom costs, but I believe that it is worth the price and more. I think you feel that way, too.

Happy Birthday, Uncle Sam. . . most of us appreciate our freedom and understand our responsibilities as you turn 207. . . I belive that the Americans of 1983 and those of the future will also appreciate and understand so "that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and continue to be a government of, by and for the people!"

Dairy-ing Desserts For A Sizzling Summer

Summer is off and running. Though the days might be lazy and hazy, there's a lot of summer celebrating, too. Cool off the next sizzling celebration with a chilled dessert right from the refrigerator.

What could be more refreshing than a light treat made with fresh fruit and creamy yogurt? Yogurt is one of the most popular dairy foods today. It's a great lower-calorie substitute for sour cream and whipping cream in many imaginative recipes.

Refresh guests with Luscious Yogurt-Fruit Fluff—a creamy, rich whipped dessert topped with fresh fruit. Please the family with Crunchy Yogurt Parfaits that layer smooth yogurt and crisp Butter Crunch.

LUSCIOUS YOGURT-FRUIT FLUFF

- 2 cups baking mix
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 1/4 cup margarine or butter
- 2 cartons (6 ounces each) Yoplait Original yogurt (any flavor)
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 2 cups chilled whipping cream
- 2 cups miniature marshmallows
- 3 cups mixed fresh fruit (sliced bananas or strawberries, halved grapes, pineapple chunks, raspberries or blueberries)

Heat oven to 375°. Mix baking mix and 2 tablespoons sugar. Cut in margarine until mixture is crumbly. Press in ungreased square pan, 9x9x2 inches. Bake until light brown, about 15 minutes; cool.

Mix yogurt and 1/2 cup sugar. Beat whipping cream in chilled bowl until stiff. Fold whipped cream and marshmallows into yogurt mixture; spread over crust. Cover and refrigerate at least 8 hours. Cut into squares; top with fruit. Refrigerate any remaining dessert. 9 servings.

CRUNCHY YOGURT PARFAITS

Prepare Butter Crunch (below). For each parfait, alternate layers of Butter Crunch and Custard Style yogurt from Yoplait (any flavor except plain with honey). Begin with crunch and end with yogurt. Garnish with fruit if desired.

Butter Crunch

- 1 cup all-purpose flour
- 1/2 cup chopped pecans or walnuts
- 1/2 cup margarine or butter, softened
- 1/4 cup packed brown sugar

Heat oven to 425°. Mix all ingredients with fork. Spread evenly in ungreased square pan, 9x9x2 inches. Bake, stirring occasionally, until light brown and dry, about 15 minutes. Cool; store tightly covered in refrigerator. About 2 1/2 cups crunch.

Custard Style is a trademark of SODIMA. Yoplait is a registered trademark of SODIMA.

Grain Drying And Storage Meeting Topic

Grain drying and storage with emphasis on natural air drying is the topic of a meeting scheduled for Monday, July 18 at 7 p.m. The meeting for grain producers is being arranged by the Pennington county extension service and will be held at the Ken Mehrkens farm three miles south and one mile west of Thief River Falls.

Dr. Harold Cloud, agricultural engineer from the University of Minnesota agricultural extension service, will discuss grain drying systems using natural air for cooling and removal of moisture for long-term storage. New research indicates that significant savings can be realized when natural air is used to supplement the drying process, according to county extension director Terry Courneya.

"The design and layout of a system to utilize natural air is very important if the potential savings are to be achieved," Courneya said. "Mehrkens farms have recently installed an efficient system that will provide an excellent focal point for discussion on how to lower energy costs in grain drying. All area grain producers are invited."

Hwy. 32 Project Reaches Public Hearing Stage

Minnesota department of transportation is seeking local input on a highway improvement project on trunk highway 32 between highway 2 and Red Lake Falls.

According to preliminary design engineer Steve Baker, an informational open house meeting was held at the Red Lake Falls city hall on June 20 and residents in the project area had an opportunity to discuss their concerns with department engineers.

Opportunity for a formal public hearing is now being offered on the project, according to Baker. If everyone involved in the project is satisfied with the department's proposals and no one requests a hearing, development of the project will proceed without a formal hearing.

The project will involve roadway reconstruction of varying methods to strengthen and widen the highway 32 roadway. Extensive grading will take place between 1.5 miles north of highway 2 and county road 114. This will remove the "no passing" zones and raise the grade in low areas.

Present plans call for a roadway with a 24-foot driving surface and 8-foot shoulders. Two feet of the shoulders would be paved. Right turn lanes would be installed from both directions at trunk highway 92 and county road 14. Slopes would be flattened slightly and obstacles would be removed from a clear zone of about 40 feet from the edge of the driving surface.

About 25 to 50 additional feet of right of way on each side of the road would be required for

The ASCS office on Dale street in Thief River Falls is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. All farmers in Pennington county who have not filed an acreage report are urged to do so this week.

NASA Awards Contract To Minn. Company

National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) has awarded a $100,000 contract for work on the space shuttle to the Micro Power Products division of Gould Inc. The division is headquartered in Eagan.

The contract is for zinc-air power packs used to operate an in-cabin radio system that enables astronauts on board the space shuttle to communicate with each other and with the ground while maintaining freedom of movement inside the orbiter.

"This contract is evidence of Minnesota's strong position in high-technology, which is so important to our state's and the country's future, Sen. Rudy Boschwitz said. "The continued growth of microelectronics will further expand NASA's and Gould's positions as strong contributors to the health and vitality of our state's high-technology base."

Boschwitz said that NASA selected Gould's Activair power cells for this application because they last nearly twice as long as the lithium batteries that NASA used previously, according to Gould representatives. Thus, fewer power packs are needed, which saves weight and space on board.

Gould will produce 60 power packs for NASA, each containing 60 individual zinc-air power cells. The company will also replace the cells in each power pack up to seven times during the life of the contracts, which runs until April 1, 1985.

The Micro Power Products division designs, develops and manufactures miniature power products for electronics applications such as memory maintenance, time-keeping and primary power. They are used in a wide variety of electronic products including multi-function calculators, time pieces, medical electronics and other devices. The division employs approximately 81 people at the Eagan administrative headquarters and manufacturing plant and at the division's other locations in the U.S. and Europe.

Bacon Retires After Long Telephone Career

by Marvin Lundin
Times Editor

When Al Bacon came to Thief River Falls in 1955, the telephone company he worked for was located on the second floor of what was then the Union State bank building. Air conditioning for the many operators handling the manual switchboards consisted of fans blowing across tubs of ice.

"I was assigned here as manager to convert the system to a number five crossbar operation," Bacon said, recalling how he came to Thief River Falls for a specific assignment and has remained here 'temporarily for 28 years.

"I have been here by choice," he affirmed. "There have been offers over the years for me to go other places with the company, but this has become home." And he makes no secret of the influence which such things as duck hunting on Thief lake, deer hunting in the area and watching high school hockey games have had on his decision to remain in Thief River Falls.

Bacon retired officially June 30 from the telephone company which he joined Oct. 13, 1947, at Fergus Falls as a lineman helper. He worked for several years in the construction part of the business as a linemane, splicer and installer, on call to move any time to anywhere construction work needed to be done.

Originally from the Staples area, Bacon moved into combination work and as an installer moved to the Appleton office where he worked for three years. He attended the first electronic crossbar school ever put on by Northwestern Bell in Minneapolis, and after completing the nine-month course went with a group of graduates to Willmar for crossbar installation.

From Willmar Bacon was assigned to Thief River Falls in September of 1955 to manage the local company and convert its manual operation to the electronic crossbar which is still the basis of the system. Summer heat in the telephone offices above the bank has become legend among operators who worked there. Offices of the company were located in the Lieberman building on LaBree avenue — again in the second story.

"All the offices on that floor were robbed one night, including our business office," Bacon recalls. "That case is still under investigation," he quipped, indicating that the thieves were never apprehended.

Construction of the present building at the corner of Fourth street and LaBree avenue was begun in 1956 and dedicated in the fall of 1957, Bacon said. It featured the automated equipment he had been trained to install, and he stayed on as supervisor in various areas. At times he took short term assignments in other areas, including the electronics engineering department in Minneapolis and construction of the primary phone center in Wadena.

While with the company here he has watched the progression from manual phones with eight-party rural lines to automated dial equipment, reduction to two-party and private lines, touch-tone dialing and other advancements. He was part of the Northwestern Bell acquisition of the many rural telephone companies from which Northwestern Bell purchased the franchises and provided switching service.

He also watched as the company consolidated into Thief River Falls operations, then as Thief River Falls was consolidated with Duluth and Duluth to Minneapolis. Employment at the local office decreased from a high of about 130 at one time to about 30 now. At one time there were 30 to 40 people working in a test center in the Thief River Falls office alone.

Bacon is somewhat relieved he won't be deeply involved in the scramble which is sure to result as a result of federal orders to break up the Bell operation. Unless the government sees the error of its ways and takes corrective action, he predicts that the government's refusal to permit long distance rates to subsidize local service will cause the local line charge to rise to $30 per month.

"As essential as telephone service is and as commonplace as Bell has made availability nationwide," Bacon said, "there are a lot of families which simply can't afford $30 a month for local telephone service."

Bacon has a daughter, Kathy Burger, in Kemmerer, WY; a daughter, Janet Bacon, in Thief River Falls; a daughter, Barbara Bacon, in Colorado Springs, CO; a son Danny, who is an oil driller in Bakersfield, CA; and a son Larry who works with the telephone company at Rush City.

He said he views retirement with mixed emotions, just as he suspects most people do. He looks forward to having the time available to do what he likes but knows he will miss the routine of going to work and facing the challenges of the day. As for plans when he was interviewed on his last day of work, they could be summed up simply:

"I have no plans other than to sleep in Friday morning," he said of the short term future, "and we won't go South until at least after the state high school hockey tournament."

That about puts retirement in its proper perspective.

UND Aerospace Center Given $572,955 Fund

Center for aerospace sciences at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks has been awarded a $572,955 amendment to a weather modification project, increasing the federal contract to $4.6 million.

Division of water and atmospheric resources within the U.S. department of interior's bureau of reclamation awarded the contract.

Funds will provide aircraft and about 10 staff members for an experimental winter cloud seeding program in the Sierra mountains and continue the nation's only weather modification pilot training program, according to John Odegard, center director.

Project also extends analysis and research with the center's Paper Cheyenne II seeding aircraft and Cessna Citation II cloud physics aircraft platforms. Federal aviation administration will cooperate with the center for aerospace sciences in some research flights.

In addition to the contract amendment, the North Dakota weather modification board recently awarded the center for aerospace sciences $144,239 for analyzing cloud physics data.

Wagons Leave Hillsboro For Homesteads in Minnesota

Twelve persons took part in that northward trek of wagons leaving Hillsboro on May 15, 1883: Martin Schej, 24 years of age, his two sisters Thea, 22, and Milla, 16, and their elderly parents, Even Andersen Schej and Anna Marie, in a wagon drawn by horses; an older gentleman by the name of Anders Torpen, driving a team of oxen; Mathias Hansen and a younger brother, also driving oxen; Peder, Mathilde and Louise with Peder's father Even in a wagon drawn by Prince and Maud, horses owned by Even. Travelers in the last rig, other than people, were the following: Brown rooster and hen, given to them by Bekkelunds; Black hen received from Strands; White hen and a gray-speckled one from Karen; Gray, yellow and black (calico) tomcat, named "Mons," received from Bekkelunds; Black and white short-haired puppy named "Passop," (derived from Norwegian, meaning "watch over" or "keep watch"); Two-month-old bull calf that occupied a crate in the wagon — fed from a special pail for that purpose; The calf's shorthorn mother, Stjerne (Star), so-named for a white marking in her forehead.

Stjerne supplied the milk for her calf and three other passengers — Louise, the puppy, and the tomcat — but she was not as fortunate as her offspring, as she had to plod along, led by the halter that was tied to the back of the wagon. The cow and calf had been purchased by Peder from Bekkelund for $45, payment for which came out of his accumulated earnings of $70 for haying and other farm work in the vicinity and $25 for services rendered to Mr. Bekkelund.

Out of the remaining $50, other essential supplies were purchased at Hillsboro, such as: two large black bread pans that completely covered the bottom of the oven; two black iron kettles, the bottoms of which rested on three small toes; two round iron frying pans; one iron pancake griddle. Total cost of the foregoing had been about $12.

There were also these items: the cook stove, a gray wash-basin, water pail with dipper, milk pail, washtub and washboard; the articles brought from Norway — dishes, cutlery, sewing machine, spinning wheel, and bedding; and the homemade furniture from their upstairs home at Bekkelunds.

An oilcloth, to be used as a table covering, and a sack of flour were purchased in St. Hilaire, and by noon of the next day — May 20, 1883 — the sixth since their departure from Hillsboro, they had completed the journey and were enjoying the hospitality of Mikkel Anderson's home.

First Home of their Own — A Shack

The shack on Peder's preemption was constructed of poplar logs with moss utilized as a filler — dimensions, 12'x14', the long side running north and south — gable roof of poles covered with hay, oak floor made of lumber prepared from logs hauled to a mill at St. Hilaire, door and six-paned window (without glass) on the west, and another glassless, six-paned window on the south. Peder made four stools out of some unused chunks of logs from which the bark had been removed. The pieces were about 18 inches long, were split, and then legs placed under each of the halves with the split side forming the top of the stool; three of the stools had four legs, but the other one could boast of only three, and its balance, at best, was unpredictable.

As soon as the little house was finished, Peder, Mathilde, and Louise moved from the Momb place to the "first home of their own." Pancakes constituted their "staff of life," and it was important to guard closely the 100-pound sack of flour that had cost them $5.00 and was the backbone of their limited provisions. When it rained, the water found its way through the hay roof and dripped into receptacles that Mathilde had attempted to place strategically for this purpose. The sack of flour was moved about from place to place, however, until there were no more dry spots. In desperation, a new system was devised whereby the oilcloth was draped over the sack in such a fashion as to cause the water to run out and away from the sack, and this resulted in a sizeable dry spot on which the sack could rest. The house served, also, as a night shelter for Mathilde's chickens — three hens and a rooster — as they were brought inside each evening after she had heard and seen one of her hens seized one night and carried away by an owl. Papers were placed on the floor beneath a roost that had been erected in the north-east corner of the shack, and here the four chickens were safe, not only from the owls but from fox, skunk, weasels, and other animals prowling about at night.

The rain that soaked through the roof of the shack and dripped from the ceiling might have dampened the sack of flour but not the spirit of these Rocksbury pioneers.

Anders played a merry Norwegian tune on the harmonica, and Schej, with the entire floor to himself, like a ballerina basking in the limelight, danced across the wet lumber, and to the merriment of all, energetically leaped into the air, returning each time with a thud, causing water from between the floor boards to spurt into the air!

Requirements for Proving Up Preemption Land

The six months allowed for proving the preemption were almost at an end, and inasmuch as Peder did not own a plow, he hired Mr. Momb to break the required five acres for a fee of $15. Then, to be able to meet oncoming obligations in connection with the land, as well as to pay the accumulated bill for supplies at Burke Brothers, he borrowed $300 from L.B. Moore who conducted a loan agency at St. Hilaire, and at least ten years were required to liquidate this loan. The interest rate was ten per cent, so Peder received the $300 minus interest, or $270, acquired title to the preemption land, then paid a fee of $14 and filed homestead on the adjoining 160 acres that he had contested when he filed on the preemption.

Peder Works in Crookston

In September, 1883, Peder drove to St. Hilaire with his oxen and wagon to meet his sister, Lise, who had come by train to stay with Mathilde while Peder worked with a gravel gang near Crookston. The oxen, Lane and Bright, were rented to Martin Rockstad, who lived west of the river one mile south of Thief River Falls, and Peder was employed at Crookston for six weeks netting about $50 — two dollars per day, out of which he paid fifty cents a day for room and board.

Stjerne, the Cow, Practically a Member of the Family

An atmosphere of sadness hung over the homestead for a while that summer when Peder decided to replace Stjerne with a younger cow — and, hopefully, a better producer. These were some of the strong points favoring the new cow: Kolla had Guernsey blood, and, resembling that choice dairy breed, she was of buff coloring (as the Norwegian name would imply); she was only five years old, and she had all the characteristics of a fine dairy animal; she was a good producer, and she was available from Karl Ulsten, a farmer near St. Hilaire.

Kjos volunteered to take Stjerne to Grand Forks and sell her to a cattle buyer. Mathilde had listened bravely, but reluctantly, to the plans for Stjerne's departure trying to conceal any sentimentality, but all of her bravery was gone as she saw Stjerne being led into the yard by Kjos ready for the long journey. As she walked out of the house, Mathilde saw Peder coming from the stable, and they reached Stjerne at the same time. With tears tumbling down her cheeks, Mathilde dropped her hand on the cow's neck and patted her affectionately. She felt Peder's hand on her arm and saw him fondly pat Stjerne, too. Then, sadly, they stepped back and watched their milk-producing partner led dutifully away by Kjos on the start of a 40-mile walk to Grand Forks. Kjos was paid $35 for Stjerne. Peder bought Kolla for $30, and she proved to be an excellent producer.

Peder Gets Job of Water Hauler for Threshing Crew

Nils Larson traveled to Hillsboro early that fall for threshing, and upon his recommendation Peder procured the job of water hauler for the Ed Wrolston Rig at a wage of $4.00 per day. While working around Hillsboro, Peder had an opportunity to visit the grave of his son Ludvig, who had died soon after their arrival from Norway.

As he stood quietly beside the little grave, Peder's mind was flooded with memories of the Atlantic crossing, the long train ride from Boston, Mathilde's uninterrupted attention to little Ludvig in spite of her own struggle with seasickness and later with escaping gas fumes in St. Paul, the loss of their baby two weeks after they came to North Dakota, and his burial beneath this little mound. It had been a simple funeral, like the one for Kristian just a few weeks ago on the farm in Rocksbury. The thought of his whereabouts startled him! He was here at Hillsboro working with the Wrolston crew, and Mathilde and Louise were on the homestead back there in Rocksbury waiting to see him as soon as this threshing run was at an end. As he walked slowly from the cemetery, he was thinking about their first two sons, Ludvig and Kristian, both buried in July, just four years apart.

The threshing job lasted ten weeks, and his earnings amounted to $250; this, he stated, was considered "being rich" at that time. At St. Hilaire, Peder discharged obligations such as the interest on his loan, his bill at Burke Brothers, and his taxes. It was time now for home threshing, and this was followed by the hauling of more stones during late fall and winter for Kreitzschmar's dam.

Hwy. 32 Plan Reaches Public Hearing Stage

the planned construction.

A detour will carry through traffic during construction and local traffic will be provided for at all times.

According to Baker, many of the questions about the project so far have centered around drainage problems and location of entrances and fences within the proposed right of way. Baker said that all landowners along the project will be contacted by right of way purchasing agents to discuss all right of way issues prior to the final project approval. Drainage plans are being developed in coordination with local authorities and affected individuals.

Development of this project is proceeding based on a tentative letting date of Oct. 25, 1985.

In addition to this project, improvements to highway 32 between St. Hilaire and Thief River Falls are now included in the 1984-1986 work program.

While the department is developing these two projects based on tentative letting dates, the actual programming of construction dollars for these projects still has to take place before work on the roadway actually begins, according to Baker.

Also, a reconstruction project for highway 32 through Red Lake Falls and north to St. Hilaire has been submitted by the local Mn/DOT district as a candidate project for the statewide 1986-1989 work program. District officials are awaiting word on this program before proceeding on this project, Baker said.

Any questions about these projects should be referred to Steve Baker, Preliminary Design Engineer, Minnesota Department of Transportation, Box 727, Bemidji, MN 56601. Telephone number is (218) 755-3336.

May Jobless Rate Declined From April

Minnesota's unemployment rate declined 1.1 per cent from April to May, a drop which "slightly exceeded the usual seasonal decline and represents a positive sign of improvement in the economy," Commissioner Barbara Beerhalter of the Minnesota department of economic security reported recently.

Minnesota's unemployment rate in May was 7.9 per cent, compared to nine per cent in April and 7.4 per cent in May of 1982. The comparable national unemployment rate for May was 9.8 per cent.

The size of the labor force was up 1.2 per cent and total employment increased 2.4 per cent from April levels.

"The increase in employment is the largest April to May change since 1979," stated Wayne Graner, department analyst.

"Despite encouraging changes in the May statistics, labor force and employment levels are below year-ago levels which already were depressed because of the state of the economy," Graner said.

Compared to May a year ago, the size of the Minnesota civilian labor force decreased by 2.7 per cent; the number of employed persons decreased by 3.2 per cent; and the number of unemployed workers increased by 3.8 per cent.

Minnesota's labor force in May was 2,145,500 persons, up 26,300 from April and down 60,000 from May last year. The number of persons employed in May was 1,975,800, up 46,900 from April and down 66,200 from May a year ago. Number of unemployed persons in Minnesota in May was 169,700, down 20,600 from April and up 6,200 from May a year ago.

Production workers in manufacturing were paid average weekly earnings of $371.45 in May for working an average of 39.1 hours at $9.50 per hour.

In May 1982 production workers were paid average weekly earnings of $354.64 for working an average of 39.1 hours at $9.07 per hour.

REFLECTI NS

The man who never alters his opinion is like standing water — in time he becomes stagnant never allowing the fresh breeze of new ideas and concepts to penetrate and illuminate the dimness. If you wish to grow in knowledge and wisdom never close your mind or your heart to new ideas, opinions and the thoughts of others, even though they may differ from your time-honored beliefs. There is always something new—"under the sun" . . . so don't live your life in the shadows.

BEATING THE HEAT at LaFave park in Thief River Falls Friday were a large number of people. Activities included playing frisbee, volleyball, swimming, diving, floating on tubes or mattresses, tanning, reading and otherwise relaxing. Temperatures which reached near the 90 mark were accompanied by high humidity and made the exodus to the shade and water of the park popular. The beach was crowded through the weekend but temperatures have moderated today and the comforts of home should be more comfortable.

Six Area Youth Participate In Rural Institute

Denise Anderson

Mark Lindholm

Lynn Johnson

Coreen Larson

Cindi Solem

Anastasia Hoffert

Denise Anderson, Mark Lindholm, Lynn Johnson, Coreen Larson and Cindi Solem of Thief River Falls and Anastasia Hoffert of Grygla participated in the Minnesota rural youth institute last week at the University of Minnesota, Crookston (UMC).

Approximately 120 high school juniors and seniors from Minnesota attended the institute which was cosponsored by UMC and the Governor's council on rural development.

Growth opportunities through leadership development was the focus of the training week. Keynote speaker Lieutenant Governor Marlene Johnson, who is chair of the Governor's council on rural development, stressed taking risks and looking at the longer view.

"As future leaders of Minnesota your actions will be felt by all of us," Johnson said. She urged participants to consider the impact of their actions on other people and to take a personal responsibility toward others.

Other speakers included UMC Provost Dr. Stanley D. Sahlstrom; Dr. Anthony Filipovitch, urban and regional studies institute, Mankato state university; Pat Abbe, UM-Waseca; and Karen Kaiser Clark, the center for executive planning, inc., St. Paul. College faculty and staff were discussion leaders for workshop sessions.

Gifted Student Being Studied At Area Forums

More than ever, schools are offering advanced programs for gifted and talented students, and more students than ever are enrolling in them. Yet, over half of our gifted students do not achieve their full potential in school. These two findings were in a recently publicized report, "A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform," by the national commission for excellence in education.

This summer throughout Minnesota, a series of public forums will be held in order to obtain recommendations on gifted education from concerned parents, teachers, and students. Minnesota advisory council for the gifted and talented will use input from the forums to develop program models for high ability students in Minnesota's public schools.

Public opinions will be heard about the kinds of courses that should be offered to kindergarten through 12th grade students who master the required curriculum easily and have the time and desire to learn more.

Should placement and grouping of students reflect academic progress rather than age? The national commission on excellence in education report said so. Parents and other individuals interested in education can respond to this issue and others at these forums.

Nearest forums to the Thief River Falls area will be on Monday, July 18, at the Moorhead public library, 115 S. Sixth St., Moorhead, (for further information contact Dr. Bella Kranz, 218-236-2954); and on Monday, August 1, at the Ottertail Power Company building, 320 Fourth St., Bemidji, (for further information contact Laurie Wenger, 218-335-2059).

Farmers May Now Rotate Reserve Grain

Leo Orpen, chairman of the Marshall county ASCS committee, stated recently that reserve grain may be now rotated and replaced with 1983 crop. Orpen stated that the rotation provision will help provide farmers with sufficient storage space for the 1983 crop.

Producers wishing to rotate their reserve grain should make a written request to the county committee stating the crop year, loan number, and amount of bushels they wish to rotate. They then may sell the grain for cash and deposit the sales proceeds with the county office or provide the county office with a warehouse receipt for the amount of bushels they rotate. Once the grain is replaced with 1983 crop the cash proceeds or the warehouse receipt will be returned to the producer.

Wheat that producers are going to receive for PIK is also eligible for rotation. When the producer accepts the PIK wheat it then will become ineligible for a 1983 wheat loan.

Orpen concluded by stating that producers interested in the rotation provision file their request with the county office for approval.

Production Up, Profits Down For Dairymen

Although May milk production was the highest for one month in 15 years and almost three per cent higher than a year ago, Minnesota dairy farmers saw their milk checks shrink by more than $1 million below the May 1982 payoff, due to lower prices and the new 50 cent federal price support tax, according to Agriculture Commissioner Jim Nichols.

Federal tax took the biggest bite, at $3.1 million, shrinking the gross farm value of Minnesota's May milk production to less than $126 million. Imposed in mid-April, the federal tax to date has taken $7.6 million out of Minnesota dairy farm pocketbooks.

Minnesota's May production, slightly more than 119 million gallons, was up by 4.2 million gallons from a year ago, although this year's 890,000 milk cows on the line were down by 20,000 from the 1982 count.

Record average production per cow, almost 134 gallons last month, made the difference. At the average farm milk price, the per cow production value in May was $147.20, minus an estimated $3.75 federal tax assessment.

Minnesota's cumulative milk production for the first five months of 1983 now total more than 551 million gallons and has grossed dairy farmers an estimated $608.4 million after subtracting the $7.6 million federal milk tax.

Last year during the same period, Minnesota's milk production, almost 541 million gallons, grossed the state's 26,000 dairy farm families almost $604 million.

This May the average Minnesota farm milk price was $1.10 per gallon, nearly a penny lower than a year ago. Present federal tax represents 43 mills or less than one half-cent per gallon that the dairy farmer is assessed for all milk sold.

Historically May is Minnesota's peak milk production month and correspondingly brings home, until this year, the year's biggest monthly milk check. Production usually declines through the summer and fall harvest months. These factors, plus the lower market prices and the federal milk tax will mean smaller milk checks for the rest of this year, Nichols predicted.

MSU Players Offer Comedy July 13-16

Comedy by Ray Cooney and John Chapman entitled "Move Over, Mrs. Markham" is this week's summer theatre production for the Straw Hat players of Moorhead state university. The apartment of a sedate matron and her stuffy husband becomes the setting for a series of hilarious marital misunderstandings and naughty nonsense in this madcap battle of the sexes.

"Move Over, Mrs. Markham" opens Wednesday, July 13, with performances through Saturday, July 16, in the air-conditioned main stage of the center for the arts. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m. nightly and tickets may be reserved by calling the 24-hour reservations line at 236-2271. Season ticket holders are urged to place ticket reservations promptly for the remaining shows of the summer to avoid sold-out performances.

Christopher Kays, Thief River Falls, plays Henry Lodge, the rakish spouse of the vivacious and slightly scatterbrained Linda Lodge.

"Move Over, Mrs. Markham" is the third production in a season of five plays being presented by the Straw Hat players this summer. Other productions are the drama "Mass Appeal" (July 20, 21, 22, 23, 27, 28, 29, and 30); and the rollicking musical adventure "The Pirates of Penzance" (August 3, 4, 5, and 6).

Conference On Hwy. 59 Project Set For Tues.

Pre-construction conference on the Minnesota department of transportation (MnDOT) project which includes grading, bituminous surfacing and signal systems on 33.9 miles of U.S. Highway 59 between Thief River Falls and Erskine, will be held at 10 a.m. Tuesday, in council chambers at city auditorium in Thief River Falls.

According to Cliff Larson, local MnDOT representative, the primary purpose of that conference will be to allow the contractor with the apparent low bid of $3,819,079, Duininck Bros. and Gilchrist, Prinsburg, to present their timetable for completion of the project, scheduled to begin August 1. This will allow representatives of various state, county, and city offices, as well as utilities and communication companies, to coordinate their work with that of the contractor.

That project will include installation of signal lights at the First Street intersection and surfacing work south of that point. Larson noted that other persons with an interest in the scheduling of the project were welcome to attend the meeting.

A Job Well Done

Citizens of St. Hilaire can pat themselves and one another on the back after the highly successful three-day centennial celebration last Saturday, Sunday and Monday. It was a tough job well done.

"It was the first time we've ever done this," one of the committee chairmen noted as we visited following the celebration. Quite so, of course, since a 100-year observance usually comes along only once in a lifetime.

But inexperience appeared to be no problem for St. Hilaire community residents as they had covered nearly every eventuality — including the heavy rains on Saturday and Monday. What activities could be moved indoors were moved indoors and those that could not were conducted in accordance with the conditions existing at the time.

Spirit of the participants also had to be commended — including those who steadfastly watched the tractor pulling contest as a drizzle turned to a downpour, those who endured a sea of mud during the three-wheeler races, and those who played softball on fields which were saturated between the puddles.

"We could have had nicer weather," another committee chairman said, "but who knows, maybe the rain helped us because people couldn't do anything else so they came to our celebration." It was a positive way to look at a probable negative situation.

As with most events of this magnitude, it will be awhile before the full results are known. But judging by the comments received, especially among those who returned to the community after long absences, the efforts of the centennial committee and assistants were deeply appreciated. Those who attended the all-school reunion were particularly enthusiastic.

We shouldn't single out individuals in a group effort such as the centennial celebration, but the job done by Woody Almquist and his committee in arranging the all-school reunion was an absolute gem. Almquist obtained the names and addresses of ALL the graduates of St. Hilaire high school and contacted all of them by letter. . . at least twice.

He and his committee, which included the Kermit Hansons of Thief River Falls, set up the banquet arrangement in the armory according to classes and the reservations received. They utilized class mottoes and class colors and class flowers in decorating the tables, and they set up a serving procedure which had some 360 people served in less than 20 minutes. A balky organ which couldn't be used deprived the group of dinner music, but it wasn't really missed as former classmates reminisced.

The celebration proves once again that it isn't the size of the community that counts, it's the quality of the people who comprise that population. If the good people are willing to put forth the extra effort, wonders can be wraught. About that extra effort on the 100-year observance, one of the centennial committee officers confided, "I don't think I'll be around for the next one!"

County Fair Is Coming

It's getting to that time again, the time when 4-H club members train and trim their animals, select their garden produce, operate sewing machines into the wee hours of the morning and put the finishing touches on other projects in preparation for entry in the Pennington county fair.

It's the time when fair board members — and especially fair board chairman "Skip" Swanson — neglect their businesses which put food on the family table and spend long hours doing volunteer work on grounds and arrangements. . . knowing full well that later on someone who did nothing will say, "What they should have done is. . ."

It's the time when craftsmen, flower growers, senior citizens, grain farmers, artists, culinary wizards, homemakers and livestock producers wonder how their entries will fare in competition with those entered by other craftsmen, flower growers, senior citizens, grain farmers, etc., etc. . .

It's the time when people suddenly realize that the fair is only two weeks away instead of a couple of months and things which should have been done two months ago have to be started now.

It's the time when commercial exhibitors, political parties and individual candidates or office holders, local organizations and businesses organize materials for their booths during the fair's five-day run July 20-24.

It's the time when those who haven't decided yet to get their tickets for the Charlie Pride show have to make up their minds and purchase reserved seats for the fair's major outside attraction.

It's county fair time again in Thief River Falls — be a part of it as an exhibitor, a spectator and a supporter. The county fair is your county and its people on review.

Mondale's Desperation

Following editorial is from the Arizona Republic:

The 1984 Democratic presidential nomination will not be within Walter Mondale's reach.

Democratic delegates will discover that the former vice president is a pathetic figure — a man so consumed with wanting to be president that he is careful not to offend anyone.

In wanting to be all things to all people, he really doesn't stand for much, and in standing for very little he has forsaken the courage and intellectual independence that a president must have to make decisions.

Mondale's appearance on NBC television's Meet The Press last Sunday was typical of the shallow performances he probably will continue to give while chasing the dream of sitting in the Oval Office.

However, Americans — Democrats or not — expect more self-respect and moral and intellectual stuff in their chief executives.

I listened to Mondale. But to make certain my eyes and ears hadn't played tricks, I had Meet The Press send a transcript of the interview.

The text substantiates my impression of the televised interview.

He is for everything that public opinion polls show voters are concerned about — the economy, employment, the environment, arms control, improved education.

But what comes through the most vividly is Mondale's desperation to be president.

"I believe my emphasis is exactly what the American people are looking for," he says on one occasion.

On another:

"I'm going to do very well, and be nominated, and be elected President of the United States."

Again:

"As this campaign goes along, I'm going to win that contest."

Then:

"Both by experience and commitment, I think I'm the best qualified to get us there (to arms control)."

This:

"I'm the president (sic) who I believe is best equipped by training and experience and commitment to move this country forward where we get that edge back."

Panelists who could even be considered sympathetic to Democratic thought could not conceal their exasperation with Mondale's inattention to specifics.

Washington Post columnist David Broder pressed Mondale to explain why he thought Paul Volcker's policies as chairman of the Federal Reserve under Ronald Reagon were any different than those under Jimmy Carter, who appointed Volcker and with whom Mondale served.

Elizabeth Drew, of The New Yorker magazine, caught him in an apparent contradiction involving nuclear weapons policies, and moderator Marvin Kalb of NBC suggested Mondale sounded very much like he favors the Central American policies of Ronald Reagon — but which he criticizes.

And Broder asked whether Mondale is a captive of the National Education Association because he refuses to criticize NEA policies.

It is one thing to differ with a candidate for the presidency.

But there is very little stuff in what Mondale says on which to differ. He is for prosperity and peace and jobs and clean air, but he lacks any strategy or map to reach those lofty and noble goals.

All he can do is say that he is best qualified and that Ronald Reagan is doing a lousy job.

What would Mondale do if he were actually in the White House and Ronald Reagan was no longer around for him to criticize?

Worse, Mondale leaves the uncomfortable impression that faced with making a quick decision on which the future survival of this country might depend, Fritz Mondale might falter as president because he hadn't taken a recent public opinion poll on the crisis at hand.

Borrowed Nonsense:

A company offered a $5 reward for any money-saving suggestions. The winner was the employee who suggested the amount be reduced to $4.

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor:

Many churches in Thief River Falls display the American and church flags in their churches. It does not hinder their worship. But my church — St. Bernard's — has no American or church flag displayed.

It's very sad to see, because so many men died for their flag to keep their country free. I'm sure that there are V.F.W. and American Legion members that go to my church, who would like to see the flags back in church, as good American, Catholic and Christian people. We should demand our flag back in church.

But there are also those people who don't care about our flag and what it stands for. Be an American and be proud of it.

To The Editor:

I was very pleased to see articles about alcohol published in recent papers. It's about time it's brought to the public's attention just how serious this sickness is. I think more information should be published each week. What I can't understand is that alcoholics are just as sick as a person with any other disease yet they are too proud or ashamed to ask for help when there is a cure.

How can people be so blind or dumb when they know what alcohol does to their bodies, let alone to their personal lives and families.

Yet the love for the bottle comes before their job, before the wife and kids. As long as they have that bottle they feel like they have the world by the tail and everything is just fine, but when they sober up if only for one day they see what shambles their lives are in and they just can't face that harsh reality, so back to the bottle. It's just one vicious circle.

What about these people who sit in a bar half the day and then try to drive home? How many of them make it home? How many kill an innocent person? We need to get these people off the road, but most important we have to get the alcoholic sober for good! We need stiffer penalties for D.W.I. Let them sit in jail for a couple weeks or send them for treatment. Something has to be done.

Alcoholics don't like reading about alcohol or hearing about it on TV or radio. That's tough. We need to hear more about it and what a dangerous killer it is. And there is nothing to be ashamed about being an alcoholic. They're scared of what their families will think. They think they are failures in the eyes of the families. If they only knew that anybody who cares anything about them will do anything to help the alcoholic and the family.

Thanks to the society we live in it is very acceptable to sit in a bar all day or sit around a keg and tell jokes. I know from personal experiences that if you don't order a drink in some bars they look at you like something is wrong with you. That's too bad! That's my choice and if I don't want a drink I won't have one. More people should learn how to say no!

There's nothing more thrilling to hear than someone say, "I'm an alcoholic and I've been sober for —— years." You feel like giving them a hug and saying, "I'm so proud of you."

1983 Hunting, Trapping Seasons Are Announced

Most of the hunting and trapping season regulations for 1983, announced by the Department of Natural Resources today, are similar to last year. However, DNR Commissioner Joseph Alexander noted that there are a few significant changes, including several that resulted from suggestions made at the nine public meetings held throughout the state.

Wildlife officials report that the outlook for deer hunting is excellent this year. Last winter was very mild and little deer mortality occurred. Whitetail populations are good everywhere except some parts of the Arrowhead region.

Antlerless deer permit quotas will be substantially increased in many areas and most of the remaining areas will equal or exceed last year's quota numbers.

Firearms deer season zones are changed from last year. Deer zone 2 is being expanded to include all of the 1982 Zone 3 from the Canadian border to the Twin Cities. With this change in Zone 3, the area open for December archery deer hunting will include those portions of Zones 1 and 2 south of U.S. Highway 2 and all of Zone 3.

Hunters are also advised that there are a few changes in the numbering system used to identify antlerless permit areas this year.

As requested by the public, the rifle zone boundary in the Twin Valley area will be expanded to follow State Highway 32 between Highway 10 and Fertile.

Antlerless permit system is being modified to allow hunters under the age of 18 to participate in a random drawing based on their firearms safety training certificate number, if they choose to forego obtaining the driver's license or official Minnesota identification card number required for the preference drawing.

Number of permits issued in the random drawing will be based on the proportion of youth applying. Youth participation in the special random drawing will not gain preference, but will have an equal chance of being drawn with all other youth applying in their permit area each year.

Additional areas (primarily state forests) will be open for the special muzzleloader deer season because of a change in the law which allows the opening of lands with significant private inholdings. However, the law change does not give hunters permission to hunt on private land without the owner's consent.

Improved status of the deer population will allow antlerless deer hunting in portions of the western Arrowhead region to be expanded this year.

Following changes, made last year, will remain in effect in 1983:

+ It is illegal for bow hunters to occupy tree stands after sundown;

+ Deer hunters may not use snowmobiles or all-terrain vehicles during legal shooting hours except between the hours of 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.;

+ Shooting hours for all big game begin at one-half hour before sunrise.

As previously announced, the moose season will open October 8 in all zones except Zone 2 (Agassiz National Wildlife Refuge) which will open December 3. A total of 5,184 hunters will be allowed to participate.

Application deadline for the moose drawing was June 15.

As announced previously, bear hunting will be allowed, by permit only, beginning September 1. Because of an increase in the bear population, hunting permits will be increased to 3,550 compared to 1,960 last year. (Applications for the drawing closed May 2.) This year's season is being opened earlier to increase opportunities for hunters to take nuisance bears causing property damage.

Small game hunting seasons will remain essentially unchanged from last year. Because of the mild winter, wildlife specialists expect the number of pheasants to be higher than 1982. They cautioned, however, that the cool, wet spring may cause below average reproduction.

Wildlife managers expect ruffed grouse hunting to remain poor this fall. Spring drumming counts were low, and reproduction is also expected to be relatively poor due to unfavorable conditions for grouse.

Only minor changes are being made in the furbearer seasons. The fisher season is being extended one day to encompass two full weekends. Fisher populations have responded very well to the conservative seasons of the past two years.

A change in the law means residents hunting raccoon, bobcat, coyote, or fox with the aid of dogs will not be required to purchase an additional license this year. However, nonresidents hunting those species, or lynx, will be required to purchase a special license in addition to the nonresident small game license. Previously, this license was required only for nonresidents hunting raccoon.

Limit on bobcat and lynx will remain at five, but no more than two of the five can be lynx. A cyclical increase in the lynx harvest is expected this year.

Trappers registering bobcat, lynx, otter or fisher will again be required to have these animals skinned and must present the carcasses with the pelt. Furbearer registration days will be continued in most areas. Further information on this will be printed in the "1983 Minnesota Small Game Regulations".

Mink, muskrat and beaver seasons will open at noon October 29. Snowmobiles will again be allowed for trapping beaver in the north furbearer zone and in the area north of the U.S. Highway 10 route between Detroit Lakes and Moorhead. The beaver season will remain open until April 30 statewide, with the exception of a "Mississippi River Zone" which will close February 29.

Waterfowl season will open October 1. Other aspects of the season will be announced later.

All hunters and trappers are urged to study the regulations before going afield. The official big game regulations should be in the hands of license vendors by mid-August and the small-game-furbearer and waterfowl regulations available shortly thereafter.

—Men's Slow Pitch—

Russ Delorme pitched a one-hit shutout Friday as Pepsi Bottling Co. blanked First Federal Savings & Loan Association 15-0 in Thief River Falls men's slow pitch softball association play.

Only hit he gave up was a single down the line by Dean Dokkin midway through the contest.

Meanwhile, E.T.'s Bees, co-leaders along with American Legion-Miller Beer-TG Sporting Goods in Division I, fell one game off the pace Friday with a 10-9 loss to Farmer's Co-op Elevator. It was incorrectly reported that E.T.'s Bees had picked up their second loss of the year last Tuesday when in fact they won by a 9-3 count over the Grygla Merchants. This time they did lose, though.

Still, a first-place confrontation shapes up Thursday when American Legion-Miller Beer-TG Sporting Goods and E.T.'s Bees meet at 6:15 p.m. on Field 1.

How To Do A Little Business On Your Own...

Holding a garage sale is a fun way to do a little business on your own... but is takes a bit of planning.

Like you'll want to decide what to sell and how much to charge for each item... and then you'll need price tags so other people will know what you're charging.

And you'll have to be able to make change for all your customers... so that means you should have lots of one dollar bills and an assortment of coins.

Then you'll want to advertise your sale to attract that crowd... You can do it with a sign or signs in your neighborhood... but you'll want a bigger crowd than that... so you'll run an ad in Classified which tells the time and place of your sale to a host of potential buyers.

EMERGING AS Thief River Falls' most effective pitcher, Tim Nyland tossed a four-hit shutout Thursday for a 1-0 win over Bemidji in the first half of an American Legion baseball doubleheader played on the fairgrounds diamond. Nyland struck out only three, but did not walk a batter. A one-out seventh inning Thief River Falls run snapped a scoreless pitching duel between Nyland and Bemidji righthander Dave Christensen. Bemidji bounced back to win the nightcap 6-2.

Texas Golf Meet Is Played At Country Club

Eleven teams participated in a Texas-style golf tournament at the Thief River Country Club, with participants asked to form their own teams consisting of a captain with an 0-5 handicap, two players with 6-11 handicap and a player with a handicap of 12 or more.

First place squad was made up of Paul Williams, Art Welter, Bob Carlson and Myrle Carlson, shooting a 32-30 for a 10-under par 62.

Second place ended in a four-way tie. In a playoff, one team was eliminated — fifth place finishers Bob Geatz, Marge Corliss, Bill Corliss and Jason Peterson. But after playing four more holes a three-way tie for second still remained, so participants decided to split the winnings equally.

Those teams included Tom Williams, Dean Anderson, Clint Hoffman, Keith Nelson; Tom Kays, Arnie Johnson, Vi Johnson, Joel Carlson; and Bruce Restad, Rick Reierson, Glenn Nelson, Steve Storhaug.

Tennis Meet Results Listed

There were 74 participants who contributed nearly $1,000 to the Lincoln high school tennis program during the Thief River Falls fund-raising tennis tournament played during the weekend.

"We're just really thrilled with the results," mentioned Jeanne Olson, one of the tournament's directors.

Proceeds from the tournament will go toward the tennis program in School District 564, categorized as a community-funded activity by school officials in light of budget cutbacks, and must be funded by money raised outside school district budget for the sport to be offered in the school next year.

Melvies lost a Thursday night triple header while Schmidts-Coke won a Friday night doubleheader in the Thief River Falls men's fast pitch softball league.

In Thursday's action, Melvies lost a pair of games to Neibauer's 5-1 and 5-0, along with a 10-0 loss at the hands of Popplers.

Al Erickson picked up the pitching wins for Neibauer's, while Erv Melvie took the losses. Wilebski had a home run in each game for the winners, with Bruce Johnson adding a solo shot. Neibauers had a 7-2 base hit edge in the opener and just a 5-4 edge in the nightcap but played errorless ball while Melvies picked up three errors.

Don Forney had a home run and a single with four RBI's in the Popplers' win. Jeff Hendrickson pitched a one-hitter while Rick Kostad, who struck out eight, took the loss as he gave up eight hits.

On Friday, Schmidts-Coke swept United Satellite Systems 11-0 and 5-1.

Mark DuChamp had a one-hit shutout in the opener as the winners jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first inning when Nick Drees hit the first pitch of the game over the left field fence and, after doubles by Tom and Mike Drury, Paul Walker drilled a two-run homer over the same spot. Schmidts' Coke added seven runs in the fourth, capped by Greg Harder's grand slam home run. Tony Johnson gave up 11 hits in the loss and his teammates committed four errors.

DIVING BACK TO the bag, Thief River Falls runner Tim Nyland beat the pick-off attempt by Bemidji pitcher Dave Christensen in the first inning of Thursday's American Legion baseball doubleheader opener. Bemidji first baseman Craig Smith took the throw, with teammate Tom Humphrey (13), who was warming up on the sidelines, looking on. The two teams split the doubleheader on the fairgrounds, with Thief River Falls winning the opener 1-0 and Bemidji taking the nightcap 6-2. Thief River Falls closes out its 1983 home season schedule this week with games Tuesday vs. Warroad, Wednesday vs. Roseau and Friday vs. Grand Forks, a 6 p.m. doubleheader. The other two games start at 7 p.m.

TRF Splits Legion Baseball Doubleheader With Bemidji

A seventh-inning run gave Thief River Falls a 1-0 first-game victory, but a five-run fifth inning provided Bemidji with a 6-2 second-game decision Thursday as the two teams split an American Legion baseball doubleheader in warm, humid temperatures at the fairgrounds diamond.

Results left Thief River Falls 13-6 for the year, with Bemidji sitting at 8-7. Thief River Falls closes out the home portion of its 1983 schedule this week with plenty of activity — 7 p.m. Northwest League games Tuesday vs. Warroad and Wednesday vs. Roseau, plus a 6 p.m. doubleheader Friday vs. the Grand Forks Royals. There's also a 7 p.m. Northwest League game Thursday at Hallock, giving Thief River Falls five games in four days.

Regular season play ends next week with games Tuesday at Detroit Lakes, Wednesday at Roseau, Thursday at Crookston and Saturday at Fergus Falls.

A scoreless pitching duel between Thief River Falls' Tim Nyland and Bemidji's Dave Christensen, a pair of righthanders, ended with one out in the bottom of the seventh inning when pinch hitter Jeff Anderson's RBI single defeated the visitors 1-0.

Kirk Jenson led off the bottom of the seventh with a single into left field off the glove of leaping Bemidji third baseman John Neubeck. Bob Huot then laid down a perfect sacrifice bunt on a full-count pitch to move the runner up. Pinch hitter Brian Kemnitz walked on five pitches to bring up Anderson, who dropped a 1-1 pitch into short left field for the game-winning RBI.

Nyland checked Bemidji on just four hits. He struck out only three, but did not walk a batter. In his last three starts — the 1-0 win over Bemidji preceded by a 3-2 victory at East Grand Forks and a 5-1 decision over Warroad in the finals of the Thief River Falls invitational tournament — Nyland has given up just three runs in 21 innings (only one earned), while limiting the opposition to 12 hits. He has displayed superb control over that three-game span, walking only four batters — none in his last two starts.

Nyland didn't have to do it alone Thursday, though. His teammates supplied the key defensive plays — double plays in the first and third innings and a big stop by Huot

Bemidji collected two of the four hits off Nyland. With Christensen at third and Roger Strong at first on back-to-back singles, Huot saved a run by knocking down Craig Smith's line drive then threw from his knees to get the inning-ending force out at second.

In the seventh, Strong singled and would up at third with one out when Doug Garrigan hit a line drive that first baseman Steve Solheim turned into an unassisted game-ending double play.

Christensen was the tough-luck loser on a six-hitter. He struck out one and walked just two in the fast-paced 1-hour, 18-minute game.

Thief River Falls extended Bemidji's scoreless streak to 11 innings with a 2-0 lead through four innings of the doubleheader nightcap before a fifth inning collapse gave the visitors a 6-2 decision.

Back-to-back one-out doubles by Tim Bottem and Kerry Wollin plated a Thief River Falls third inning run, with Wollin going to third when Bemidji tacked an error onto his two-base hit. A sacrifice fly by Al Ness made it 2-0.

Wollin had shut Bemidji out on four hits through four innings, but a hip injury forced him out of the game and Bob Huot, who pitched a strong game in his last start, a 2-0 loss to Karlstad the week before, suffered through a rocky inning, giving up five runs — although only two were earned — in just one-third of an inning.

There were four walks, three Bemidji hits and two Thief River Falls errors that led to a five-run Bemidji inning. Steve Smith had an RBI double in there; Dave Christensen drew a bases-loaded walk for an RBI; and Gary Johnson bounced a two-run single through the left side of the infield. A throwing error scored the first run of the inning.

Thief River Falls threatened to get right back in it by loading the bases with nobody out in the bottom of the fifth, but didn't get a thing out of it.

Bemidji secured its win with a sixth inning run as Tom Humphrey drew a lead-off walk, wound up at second on an error on a botched pick-off play, went to third on another infield error and scored on a sacrifice fly by Bill Stombaugh.

Thief River Falls coach Nick Drees found both good and bad in the doubleheader performance.

"We're not disappointed about losing (the second game," he said, "but we are disapppointed about how we lost. They scored five runs in one inning on three hits, so you know you're not doing something right. We didn't come through (offensively or defensively) when we had the chances."

Even in winning Drees indicated he wasn't entirely satisfied, especially at bat. There were few hard-hit balls. But, he noted, "We got another good pitching performance out of Nyland, and we came up with a couple of key plays when we needed them."

Doubleheaders Are Won By TRF Squad

Thief River Falls Babe Ruth A team made it three doubleheader sweeps in one week with victories over Crookston Wednesday and Warroad Thursday on the fairgrounds diamond, preceded by an already-reported double triumph over Roseau Monday.

Coach Mark Harder's Thief River Falls team, 14-6 going into the Thief River Falls Elks invitational tournament scheduled to be played Saturday and Sunday, will close out its 1983 regular season schedule with a doubleheader Wednesday vs. Red Lake Falls at 12-noon on the fairgrounds diamond.

TRF - Crookston

Thief River Falls swept Crookston 10-7 and 6-3 Wednesday.

Both sides scored four times in the first inning of the opener, but Thief River Falls tacked on three runs in the fourth, including an RBI double by Lee Hamre, and added three more in the fifth. The winners had a 10-4 base hit edge, with Quincy Lofberg going 2-for-3 with a first-inning RBI double and Kory Joppru 2-for-4. Winning pitcher Jeff Anderson struck out nine and walked four.

Thief River Falls had six runs and six hits in the nightcap while Crookston had three runs and three hits.

Tom Knoff had an RBI double in a three-run first inning for the winning while Dave Johnson and Jeff Anderson had back-to-back doubles to lead off a two-run second that provided winning pitcher Dave Onkka with a 5-1 cushion. Knoff and Anderson were both 2-for-3 with two RBI's each.

TRF - Warroad

Thief River Falls batters had a field day Thursday against Warroad, rapping 33 hits in the 14-4, 11-6 wins.

In the opener, seven of the nine Thief River Falls players had two or more hits each, with Rich Bendickson, Lee Hamre and Tom Knoff all going 3-for-4. Jeff Anderson, Quincy Lofberg, Dan Iverson and Mike Kloety had two hits each. Hamre had three RBI's as Thief River Falls scored in every inning to back Bendickson's six-hit pitching.

Base hits continued to fall in the nightcap as Dan Iverson and Kory Joppru were both 3-for-3 in a 15-hit attack. Dave Johnson and Scott Novak had two hits apiece as Thief River Falls scored twice in the first inning and made it 6-2 in the second. Winning pitcher Marty Levin scattered six hits.

A PAIR OF Roseau players had Thief River Falls runner Jeff Anderson caught in a rundown between third and home in the third inning of Saturday's opening round game of the Thief River Falls Elks Babe Ruth baseball invitational tournament for 14-15-year-olds. Anderson was caught and tagged out on a missed suicide squeeze bunt attempt as he got hung up between catcher Dion Henderson and third baseman Scott Janicke. Thief River Falls defeated the defending tournament champion Roseau squad 3-0, added a 1-0 victory over the Bemidji Lions in the Saturday night semifinals and posted a 12-3 decision over East Grand Forks in the Sunday evening finals for championship honors in the eight-team event.

Country Club Schedule Has Several Meets

Several events are on the calendar this week at the Thief River Country Club.

Wednesday is the deadline to sign up for the annual Tunberg Motors match play classic. Two-time defending champion Diane Anderson is one of 12 golfers signed up for the 1983 event, open to 36 golfers, men and women. First place prize is a Phyllis Moum golf sweater.

Scheduled Saturday is the club's annual best ball tournament open to all members. The event, featuring scratch and handicap divisions, will have an 8:30 a.m. start.

Activity continues with a junior golf tournament Monday, July 18, for boys and girls ages 10-17, followed by the annual Thief River Falls ladies invitational tournament on Tuesday, July 19.

Leaders Named In Men's Golf League Play

Divisional leaders were announced today (Monday) after six weeks of play in the Thief River Country Club men's golf league.

Lee Plumbing & Heating is the Division I leader with an 852 team stroke total, followed by AA Carpets at 866 and the Eyelites 879.

Blue Cross is the Division II leader with an 841, followed by Bruce Pharmacy 844 and Ekeren Drug 852.

Berkner Agency is the Division III leader with an 849, followed by Red Owl 867 and Model Laundry 868.

First Federal Savings & Loan Association is the Division IV leader with an 812, followed by Miracle Water-Gordon's Hallmark 839 and Family Bowl 863.

Low gross honors last week went to Jerry Imgrund with a 35. Low net score was a 29 by Bob Bendickson and Aldon Hyland.

Game of the day recognition for the most and fewest putts on three blind holes went to George Thorson, least; and Mark Haugen and Clint Hoffman, tied for the most.

USING A head-first slide, Thief River Falls runner Dan Iverson crossed the plate ahead of a high throw to Roseau catcher Dion Henderson for the game's first run on a delayed double steal for the first run of the game during Saturday's opening round match-up in the Thief River Falls Elks Babe Ruth baseball invitational tournament. Plate umpire Brian Johnston watched the play. Thief River Falls nursed that 1-0 lead into the sixth inning before emerging with a 3-0 victory over the defending champion Roseau team. Thief River Falls added wins over the Bemidji Lions 1-0 and East Grand Forks 12-3 for championship honors in the eight-team, two-day tournament.

DNR hotline

Spring Turkey Shoot

Despite snow, cold, rain or strong winds during most of Minnesota's 25-day spring turkey hunt, the Department of Natural Resources reports that more of the birds were bagged this season than in 1982.

During this year's hunt, which ended May 8, DNR checking stations recorded 116 birds — a nine per cent increase over 1982 results.

Department wildlife officials estimate that approximately 1,700 hunters participated in the season, meaning that one hunter in 14 actually bagged a turkey.

Questionnaires are being sent to those who took part in the 1983 hunt and wildlife officials urged that the forms be completed and returned as soon as possible.

According to the findings from past questionnaires, hunters express satisfaction with the seasons and enjoy the challenge of trying to bag one of the large birds.

Information about next year's hunt will be released this fall, probably in October.

Black Duck Decline

A continued decline in the nation's black duck population during the past several years has gone little noticed in Minnesota where the bird makes only a tiny contribution to the total state duck bag each year.

Minnesota wildlife officials say black ducks have never comprised a large part of the total state duck harvest, even in past years before the decline in the black duck population. The number of black ducks taken in the state has varied from 2,000 to 3,000 annually during the past three years.

However, like other state and federal wildlife specialists, Minnesota game officials are concerned with a sharp drop in the population of any wild species, and it is certain that black ducks have declined greatly in abundance since the 1950's.

Black duck — sometimes called black mallard — is a close cousin to the mallard which it resembles. More than 700,000 of the birds were recorded in the winter census of 1955 but by the early 1960's the count had dropped below 450,000.

Last winter's count turned up only 294,000 — estimated to be about 20 per cent of the continent's current black duck population.

Scientists are unsure what accounts for the drop in numbers, but the federal Fish and Wildlife Service is going to put even greater restrictions on the hunting of black ducks this fall.

These regulations have yet to be announced. Minnesota wildlife officials said the few black ducks observed here are mostly found in the northeastern part of the state, so hunters there will have to be alert for the new rules when they are made public.

Babe Ruth Baseball Invitational . . .

TRF Beats EGF 12-3 To Win Elks Tourney Title

Sparked by the pitching performances by Jeff Anderson and Dave Onkka, host Thief River Falls defeated Roseau, the Bemidji Lions and East Grand Forks over the weekend en route to a championship performance in the 15th annual Elks Babe Ruth baseball invitational tournament for 14-15-year-olds.

Anderson shut out defending champion Roseau on four hits Saturday morning in a 3-0 opening round victory; Onkka blanked the Bemidji Lions on five hits Saturday evening in a 1-0 semifinal decision; and Anderson was back on the mound for five hits Saturday evening in a 1-0 semifinal decision; and Anderson was back on the mound for five innings of shutout ball and a 12-3 championship game triumph over East Grand Forks Sunday night.

Those results extended a nine-game Thief River Falls winning streak, putting the team at 17-6 for the season under first-year coach Mark Harder, who said he wasn't surprised at the title-winning performance.

"We figured since we've been playing well, we had a good shot at it. They played just great the whole tournament; we've been playing like that lately," he explained.

"Everybody played well, not just the pitchers," noted Harder, but Thief River Falls' pitching still deserved special recognition after the two-day, eight-team tournament — played in 90-degree weather throughout — was completed.

"Anderson pitched two great games," acknowledged Harder. "In the last five games his curve ball has been keeping everybody off balance. He's been throwing it for strikes on full counts. And Onkka pitched a fabulous game," he quickly added.

East Grand Forks coach Kelly Forester was equally impressed with Anderson.

"Thief River deserved to win," he admitted. "The kid who pitched threw the ball real well. He kept the ball down and changed speeds on us. He didn't give our hitters anything to hit."

While Thief River Falls was using pitching and defense to squeeze out wins over Roseau (a 1-0 game through 5½ innings) and the Bemidji Lions, East Grand Forks was using offensive power to rout the Bemidji Braves 19-2 and Grand Forks Gerrels 13-3 in a pair of five-inning, 10-run-rule decisions to reach the finals, making Anderson's championship game pitching performance even more impressive.

"We scored 32 runs and had 22 hits in 10 innings Saturday, but we couldn't get anything off him (Anderson) today," offered Forester. "We were maybe a little flat today. We had a lot of mental errors. No excuses, though. Thief River was a better team today than we were."

East Grand Forks had beaten Thief River Falls 14-4, 12-10 in a doubleheader meeting back on June 16. In a schedule quirk, East Grand Forks returns to Thief River Falls today (Monday) for a 12-noon doubleheader, a make-up affair from a June 30 rain postponement. Thief River Falls closes out its 1983 regular season schedule with a 12-noon doubleheader vs. Red Lake Falls Wednesday. Sub-district tournament play starts next Monday in Crookston. Despite the current winning streak and recent success, Thief River Falls finds itself needing wins this week to improve its post-season seeding position because of a 1-3 record in sub-district-counting games to date.

Tournament Results

Quarterfinals — Thief River Falls 3, Roseau 0; Bemidji Lions 4, Crookston 3; East Grand Forks 19, Bemidji Braves 2; Grand Forks Gerrels 2, Red Lake Falls 0.

Semifinals — Thief River Falls 1, Bemidji Lions 0; East Grand Forks 13, Grand Forks Gerrels 3.

Finals — Thief River Falls 12, East Grand Forks 3.

Third place — Grand Forks Gerrels 15, Bemidji Lions 3.

Consolation semifinals — Crookston 6, Roseau 4; Bemidji Braves 9, Red Lake Falls 1.

Consolation finals — Bemidji Braves 13, Crookston 2.

It was the eighth Elks tournament title for a Thief River Falls, but the first since 1981 when an all-Thief River Falls final found the Elks beating the Independents 4-1 in nine innings. Harder was a member of the championship Thief River Falls Elks team in 1979.

Sunday's three games produced nearly identical scores: Bemidji Braves 13-2 over Crookston in the consolation finals; Grand Forks Gerrels 15-3 over the Bemidji Lions for third place; and Thief River Falls 12-3 over East Grand Forks for the title.

Jeff Anderson struck out 15 Roseau batters and walked only two in his four-hit 3-0 shutout pitching to open the tournament's quarterfinals Saturday morning.

Anderson was locked into a scoreless pitching duel with Roseau's Sid Thompson until the fourth inning when Dan Iverson crossed the plate on a delayed double steal.

Thief River Falls gained some breathing room in the sixth when Mike Kloety was credited with an RBI triple when a Roseau outfielder failed to come up with the ball on a two-out shoestring catch attempt in center field. Anderson, who had two of the seven Thief River Falls hits, then bounced a single past third base to score Kloety for a 3-0 cushion.

Thief River Falls was locked into another scoreless pitching duel in the Saturday night semifinals before a run in the bottom of the seventh inning gave Dave Onkka a five-hit shutout victory over the Bemidji Lions.

Al Sorem singled to lead off the inning, stole second and moved up on a sacrifice by Marty Levin. Mike Kloety walked to put runners on first and third with two out when Jeff Anderson singled up the middle for the run. Anderson was 2-for-4 in the six-hit Thief River Falls offense.

Jeff Anderson's pitching continued to dominate play in the Sunday finals against East Grand Forks, but he also continued to be a force offensively as well with a 3-for-5 effort and two RBI's in the one-sided 12-3 Thief River Falls victory.

Anderson finished the tournament with seven hits in 13 at-bats. Rich Bendickson, Lee Hamre, Kory Joppru, Dave Johnson and Quincy Lofberg all added two hits to the 14-hit Thief River Falls assault off two East Grand Forks pitchers.

Hamre tripled and scored on a wild pitch for a first inning run. Anderson had a two-run double and Bendickson added an RBI single in the second as the lead mounted to 4-0.

Hamre was hit by a pitch and later scored on a single to left by Joppru in the fifth, with Al Sorem's base hit to right field scoring Joppru for a 6-0 cushion.

Thief River Falls pulled away in the sixth when three wild pitches, a passed ball, an error and a delayed double steal of home was included with three hits in a less-than-artistic inning for East Grand Forks. Hamre added a two-run single down the right field line to complete the Thief River Falls scoring in the top of the seventh.

A two-out single by Chad Grassel into short left field snapped Anderson's string of scoreless innings in the sixth, bringing home Troy Ausmus, who hit a long triple to the right field corner to open the inning.

A series of four consecutive East Grand Forks pinch hitters helped produce a pair of seventh inning East Grand Forks off a tiring Anderson in the bottom of the seventh.

Farm Planting Declines Due To PIK Acres

Last April, Minnesota farmers said they intended to plant more soybeans than corn this year. But they've apparently changed their minds and have opted for more corn instead.

Nonetheless, Minnesota corn plantings still fell 30 per cent short of last year. The state's corn plantings were fourth highest in the U.S.

Also ranking fourth, Minnesota soybean acreage of 4.65 million acres was 300,000 acres less than what farmers said they'd plant in April.

Total wheat acreage fell 28 per cent from last year. While winter wheat plantings were higher, durum acreage was off by half of last year and spring wheat fell 28 per cent. The state ranks second in spring wheat plantings this year.

While Minnesota farmers boosted oats acreage 39 per cent from last year, 50 per cent is slated for cover crop on PIK acres, and only 1.25 million acres are slated for harvest, down 23 per cent.

Minnesota maintained its first place status as the largest sugarbeet planting state, increasing acreage two per cent from last year.

Barley and rye plantings were higher, an exception in a year when plantings for almost all other Minnesota crops were lower.

In response to the PIK program, across the U.S. farmers slashed corn plantings 27 per cent from last year for a total of 60.1 million acres.

The nation's all wheat crop was planted on 76.6 million acres, 12 per cent short of last year. This was broken down as follows: Durum wheat, 2.55 million acres; other spring wheat, 11.6 million; winter wheat for harvest was 47.7 million.

The boybean crop was planted on 63.3 million acres, a 12 per cent smaller area than last year. While oats acreage increased 42 per cent, only 9.05 million acres will be harvested (down 14 per cent from last year) and the remainder will be used as a cover crop under the PIK program.

IMPRESSIVE MACHINE is this Barth Holland TL82 tiling equipment owned and operated by Del Determan of Brooks Tile, Inc. Determan was working early this week on the Mike Rubischko farm formerly owned by Dave Bruggeman about four miles southeast of Thief River Falls. Brooks Tile has owned the Holland-built machine only a few days and the Rubischko project was only its fifth job. Determan estimated it would require about eight hours of actual operating time to place from 5,000 to 6,000 feet of four-inch and six-inch tile in the 80-acre field. Rubischko is from the New Ulm area and is familiar with the advantages of tile drainage on farms in that area. He moved to Thief River Falls in April.

Tile Drainage Is Gaining In Popularity For Area

by Marvin Lundin
Times Editor

Improvement of field drainage through the installation of buried drainage tile has never been popular in this area of the state. Some long-term area farmers will insist that it is a system which simply won't work. But more tiling is being done each year and, as technology improves, the success ratio of tile installations keeps improving as well.

Among those farmers applying field drainage tile techniques in this area are those who have purchased land and moved into northwestern Minnesota from areas where tiling has been done extensively and successfully for a number of years. They're not trying to upstage the local farmers who have relied on surface drainage systems for years, they're just making the best effort they can to assure that their land reaches its maximum productive capability.

One of the newcomers who is having tiling done on his farm is Mike Rubischko, who purchased the Dave Bruggeman farm about four miles southeast of Thief River Falls and moved here from the New Ulm area in April. Brooks Tile, Inc., owned by Del Determan of Brooks, worked at the farm Monday and Tuesday to install between 5,000 and 6,000 feet of four-inch and six-inch tile tubing in an 80-acre area.

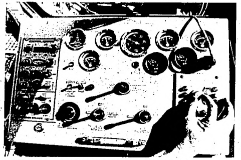
"Tiling isn't for everybody or for every situation," Rubischko said, "but I really believe it will be a big help on this farm. Just look at what standing water and saturated soil did in this field. Look at the corn on the high ground where the water could drain away. Better subsurface drainage has to help give the crop a chance to grow."

Rubischko's corn field honestly didn't look like much. Plants in low areas were stunted, discolored or gone completely. Tracks made by the tiling machine across the corn field were dismissed with a shrug.

"They're not hurting much of this crop," he said. "But even if I had a good crop, I would rather have the tile being put in and take some crop damage from the equipment. I don't want to look like some smart outsider coming in and telling local farmers they're wrong by not tiling. Every farmer has to assess his own situation. In this case, I expect it to be a good investment that will pay for itself in not too many years.

Rubischko said he recalls wet harvest seasons in the New Ulm area when harvest equipment would get stuck on the side hills. "If you had the option, you headed for the low ground," he said. "That's where the tile was and that's where the land was firm enough to carry the equipment. It may sound crazy but it's true."

DEL DETERMAN (left), owner of Brooks Tile, Inc., and Mike Rubischko of rural Thief River Falls take a look at some of the soil brought up by the tiling machine operating on the Rubischko farm southeast of Thief River Falls. Rubischko is from the New Ulm area where field drainage tile is commonly used and believes it is an important part of field management in many cases. Although he had a corn crop planted where the tiling equipment was working, he was more concerned about getting the tile in place than in crop damage from the equipment. Standing water or saturated soils had nearly eliminated the crop in many areas of the field, but Rubischko said he would have gone ahead with the tiling even if the crop had been uniformly good.



CONTROL PANEL located in the cab of the Barth Holland tile laying machine gives the operator a compact view of how his machine is operating and the job it is doing. The machine utilizes a laser light beam from a pre-determined point in the field which is intercepted and transferred to the hydraulic control, automatically controlling depth at which the tile is being placed. The machine can operate to a depth of eight feet and is powered by a 325 horsepower Caterpillar diesel engine. Its listed weight is 68,000 pounds, according to owner Del Determan of Brooks Tile, Inc.

Doing the tile work on the Rubischko farm, Del Determan was using an almost new Barth Holland TL82 tiling machine which was built in Holland and purchased through Canada. The 68,000 pound machine is laser controlled, automatically placing the tile in the ground with a slope of one-tenth foot per 100 feet of length. Powered by a 325 horsepower Caterpillar diesel engine, the machine travels on wide crawler tracks and plows a trench for the tile up to eight feet in depth, feeding the tile in as it moves along at a man's walking pace.

Determan said the Rubischko farm was his fifth job with the new machine which is controlled for both slope and attitude of the machine. With this control, depth of the tile is not affected even if the crawler tracks travel over uneven ground. If the tracks move up or down with the terrain, the shoe cutting the trench compensates for that movement by cutting shallower or deeper.

On the Rubischko farm Determan said he was covering the tile at a depth of

82nd County Fair Offers Variety Of Entertainment

Pennington county's 82nd annual county fair will open next Wednesday, July 20, as one of the changes made this year is the partial extension of the fair to a five-day event. More activities, more major attractions, increased premium payments, additional work on the grounds and a concerted effort to provide something of interest for everyone are all part of the 1983 free gate fair.

Country singer Charlie Pride will be the headline attraction for the fair as the fair board has joined with KTRF-KSNR radio to jointly sponsor a two-concert performance Friday evening. Shows are scheduled at 7 and 9:15 p.m. in front of the grandstand (weather permitting) or in the Lincoln high school gymnasium. Performing from 6:20 to 6:50 p.m. and 8:45 to 9:15 p.m. will be the "Last Resort" band.

Advance ticket sales for the Charley Pride concerts have been good, according to fair board treasurer Richard Anderson, with reserved seats selling for $9 and $11 in advance or $11 and $13 at the gate. The county fair's ticket booth will be located in front of the sports arena beginning next Wednesday noon to sell advance tickets for the Charley Pride shows and the Thursday night Grandstand Jam geared to young fairgoers.

A special "Golden Circle" ticket is also being offered for $25 which entitles the holder to a seat near the stage for the 7 p.m. show and reception between shows at Tunberg Motors. The tickets are available at Holcomb-Knudson and company in downtown Thief River Falls.

Oliver (Skip) Swanson, president of the fair board, emphasized that the board will make future decisions on bringing in other top name entertainers based on the results of this year's response to the Charley Pride concerts. If the public response indicates it will support such attractions financially, area residents can look forward to other top entertainers appearing here each year.

Swanson noted that livestock premiums for exhibitors have been increased by 25 per cent in nearly all divisions and that early indications are that barn space may be crowded with entries. A division for dairy goats has been added for Friday only and judging in open horse halter classes will be added to the 4-H club horse show this year.

The area west of the sheep and poultry building which formerly was used for horse shows has been graded, rocks have been picked and the area rolled for use in auto parking this year. Horse shows will be held in the area west of the horse barns.

Several flower beds have been planted and an area sodded near the fair office building. The newly sodded area, which also includes pathways made from pearock, will have plantings provided by Horseshoe Gardens and several picnic tables where fairgoers can rest and visit. Persons wishing to call the fair grounds during the fair may call the sports arena number (681-4661). Beginning next Wednesday morning, the phone system will be arranged to handle calls in both the arena office and fair board office building.

While entry day for exhibitors will continue to be Thursday, extension of the fair to a five-day event includes opening of the midway on Wednesday and a grandstand program Wednesday evening. Carnival ride bracelets can be purchased for $7 which will permit children an unlimited number of carnival rides Wednesday from noon to 6 p.m. The Matt Armstrong Shows has a number of new rides this year, according to local show officials. Special Kiddies Days will also be observed from noon to 6 p.m. on Friday and Sunday with the same $7 bracelet price offered each day.

Harness racing will return to the county fair Wednesday evening when the Minnesota Harness Racing association will present a racing program in front of the grandstand. The track has been graded in preparation for the fair program and several races are being planned by the

Hwy. 59 Work Could Start By Next Week

Preparation is already underway and actual construction on the upgrading of Highway 59 to a 10 ton route between Thief River Falls and Erskine is expected to begin as early as Monday morning, according to Harris Duininck.

Duininck is a partner in Duininck Bros. and Gilchrist, the Prinsburg construction company which was apparent low bidder on the job at $3,819,079. He discussed his company's timetable for completing the work with representatives of the Minnesota department of transportation (MnDOT), utility companies, government officials and other interested parties during a pre-construction conference held Tuesday morning in council chambers at city auditorium.

Cliff Larson, District 2 resident engineer for MnDOT, reminded Duininck that any work done prior to approval of the contract on August 1 would be unauthorized, but Duininck emphasized that "tighter than tight" time restrictions placed on the job by MnDOT, required that his company try to get as much done in advance as possible. Officially scheduled to begin August 1, the job is supposed to be completed within 45 working days. The contractor may be assessed a penalty of $1,800 for each calendar day by which it exceeds that time limit. As long as the company's operations do not interfere with traffic, days worked prior to August 1 will not be counted against the 45 day limit.

Duininck said that they expect to start working at the Brooks corner, moving south for two or three days, then working both ways. Gravel will be hauled from a pit located about six miles east of Brooks for about the first month, with a pit located about four miles west of St. Hilaire used later. Hauling

Negotiations Meet Moved To Service Center

Negotiations meeting at which the Thief River Falls board of education will present its counter offer to the Thief River Falls Education association has been changed from the Lincoln high school library to the school district service Center.

Supt. Robert Block said that the meeting continues to be scheduled for 7 p.m. tonight (Wednesday) but that the location has been changed because the second floor Lincoln library is not air conditioned and today's 90-degree temperatures would make it uncomfortable.

Negotiations sessions are open to the public.

VICKI LYNN HAMS of Karlstad will be one of the nine candidates for Miss Thief River Falls honors during the Miss America preliminary scholarship pageant on Saturday, July 30. A former Miss Karlstad, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Hams of Karlstad.

Vicky Hams In Queen Pageant

(This is the sixth in a series of articles on candidates for the Miss Thief River Falls title at the Jaycee Summerfest pageant July 30 at the Lincoln high school auditorium. The scholarship pageant is an official Miss America preliminary event with the winner to advance to the Miss Minnesota pageant in Austin.)

by Marvin Lundin
Times Editor

A believer that dreams can come true, Vicky Lynn Hams of Karlstad has dreams of some day singing professionally. In the meantime, she is continuing her plans to work in corporate recreation and spending this summer as a lifeguard at Lake Bronson state park.

Vicky Lynn, 24, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Hams of Karlstad, a 1977 graduate of Karlstad high school and 1982 graduate of Bemidji state university. She has a bachelor of science degree with a major in physical education and minors in health and recreation as well as coaching certificates.

Vicky is five feet eight inches tall, weighs 120 pounds, has brown hair and blue eyes. Her pageant talent presentation will be a vocal solo.

As a previous Miss Karlstad, she participated in the 1983 Miss Minnesota pageant and was voted the Miss Congeniality award. She has been a lifeguard at the state park for the past six years, enjoys playing basketball as well as swimming and is also an avid dancer. She performed in the dance follies at Bemidji state university and is interested in choreography, having taken both dance and voice lessons.

Vicky Lynn was president of the Karlstad high school student council, named to "Who's Who in America" for outstanding cheerleaders, earned letters in basketball and music and was a junior varsity cheerleader in college. She earned district and state level music awards while doing solo work as well as singing in octettes and sextettes, and received an education scholarship to Bemidji state.

County Rejects City's Suggestion On Minstar

Actions of the utilities committee provided topics for the city council at their regular meeting held last night in city auditorium, along with the announcement that the county board had rejected their recommendations for reduction in property assessments for Minstar Inc. and Consumers Coop.

Superintendent of utilities John T. Anderson reported on expenditures to date on converting the recently purchased Toreq property for use by the utilities and park and recreation departments. He noted that $1,348.77 had been spent on cleaning supplies; $1,509 on lighting and wiring of inventory and office area; $15,093.15 for lumber, paint, carpentry, etc. for the office area, drafting room and inventory control area; and $3,348.79 for extra labor. He added that additional improvements could run as high as $30,000.

Anderson estimated that city forces were about 60 per cent finished with the process of vacating the old Dow Key building, stating that they hoped to be out of the building by the end of the week. Northern Outerwear Inc. is expected to begin moving into the building at any time, under a lease-sale agreement with the city.

Anderson also made a presentation to the council regarding a new policy developed on installation of underground services. Although the department has been working to convert overhead services to underground, he noted that some customers did not want to wait for city crews to do it. Under the new policy, customers hiring to have the work done would be paid approximately what it would cost the city to do it. Payment made to the customer would include 40 cents per foot materials-cost, plus 15 cents per foot for labor for burying the wire to the alley; plus $20 for installing the meter. Service would have to be upgraded to 100 amps, and the city would furnish conduit under the alley. Customers wanting 200 amp service would pay $20 for heavier wire.

Council approved the policy. Anderson noted that customers would have to make their own arrangements with telephone and cable television companies whose wires are buried in the same trench. Work must meet the approval of the electrical inspector.

Also approved by the council was a policy established by Minnkota power company which would make payments to customers installing ripple controlled electric heating. Referred to as the "blitz" promotion, the program is intended to generate new customers for controlled power. Under the program, the first 80 customers installing the equipment by October would receive $200, of which the

SOCIETY and CLUBS

Kari Lee Stark And Lester Hamlin Wed Here

Miss Kari Lee Stark and Lester Hamlin exchanged marriage vows at 4:00 p.m., on Saturday, June 4, at St. John Lutheran church in this city.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thornton Stark of rural Thief River Falls. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hamlin, rural St. Hilaire.

Rev. Kenneth Wittenburg of Itasca Park officiated at the double ring ceremony attended by 225 relatives and friends. Elaine Idso, a friend of the bride, was the organist, playing "Wedding March," and "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring." Vocal selections were "Wedding Song," "Wedding Prayer," and the "Lord's Prayer," by DeNae Reiswig, a cousin of the bride; Sheldon Buck, a friend of the bride; and LaVon Schlenker, aunt of the bride.

Forming the setting for the ceremony were arrangements of yellow carnations on the altar, candelabra with yellow tapers and green bows; yellow bows on the pews and yellow candles and roses on the side panel.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was attired in an organza gown featuring an empire, Victorian styled lace bodice with Chantilly lace at the high neckline. Pearls and dainty embroidery accented the sheer yoke. Her sheer bishop sleeves with wide lace cuffs were complemented by lace motifs, matching the lace motifs that graced her full skirt styled with a front lace panel. Corresponding lace highlighted the pick-up look on the cathedral length train. A Chantilly lace headpiece, trimmed with pearls, held her chapel-length veil, edged with Chantilly lace. She carried a white Bible topped with yellow satin roses, lilies of the valley, yellow bows and white streamers.

Kathy Stark attended her sister as maid of honor. Other attendants were the groom's sisters: Patty Doyea, Crookston, Lynn Hodgson, also of Crookston, and Jeannie Hamlin, St. Hilaire. Their spaghetti strap gowns of light yellow polyester were topped by matching chiffon jackets with lacy trim at the neckline, wrists and gathered waist. In their hair, they wore a comb with yellow satin roses, and yellow and white ribbon streamers. They carried lace covered books topped with flowers matching those carried by the bride.

Linda Sund was the bride's personal attendant.

Tara Reiswig, Harvey, N.D., a cousin of the bride, was flower girl. Her gown of yellow chiffon and polyester, featured ruffles at the neckline, wrists and hemline. She carried a bouquet of yellow satin roses, accented with streamers and yellow satin rose buds.

Ring bearers was Scott Doyea, Crookston, a nephew of the groom. Like the men of the wedding party, he wore a light green Wellington tuxedo with dark green trim, a white shirt and a yellow satin rose boutonniere with lily of the valley accents.

Best man was Troy Rolland, St. Hilaire, a friend of the couple. Groomsmen were Ralph Hamlin, California, brother of the groom; Brian Stark, brother of the bride; and Mike Hamlin, St. Hilaire, a brother of the groom. Ushers were James Noreen, Grand Forks, N.D., a friend of the couple, and Neil Seibel, Harvey, N.D., a cousin of the bride.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Stark wore a peach floor-length gown styled with a pleated skirt and a sleeveless lace bodice. Her corsage was of yellow satin roses and lilies of the valley. A similar corsage complemented the jacket topping the navy blue floor-length gown worn by the groom's mother.

Honor guests were Mr. and Mrs. Helmuth Schlenker, Thief River Falls, and Mrs. Alma Wiedmeier, and Mrs. Clara Meier, both of Harvey, N.D.

A reception in the church parlors followed the ceremony. Host and hostess were Mr. and Mrs. Harold Schlenker, Menomonie, Wis., uncle and aunt of the bride, and also her godparents. At the guest book was Lynn Pederson, a friend of the bride. The bride's cousins, James Ruud, Vermillion, S.D., and David Ruud, served the punch.

Centering the serving table was a three-tiered wedding cake featuring a flowing water fountain. Topping the cake was a heart-shaped ornament with a hand blown glass dove with double wedding rings, backed by a rainbow spray, tinted yellow. The cake was cut and served by Mrs. Darlene Ruud, Ada, aunt of the bride, and Mrs. Dee Noreen, Grand Forks, N.D., friend of the couple. Pouring coffee were Sue Thorson, sister of the groom, and Carlene Hamlin, sister-in-law of the groom.

The gifts were arranged by Shawn and Shane Doyea, Crookston, nephews of the groom. Yvonne Seibel, a cousin of the bride, Nancy Noreen and Becky Jones, friends of the couple, and Barb Ruud, a cousin of the bride, served as waitresses. Eileen Horejsh, a cousin of the bride, made and pinned the flowers.

Relatives and friends attending were from Washington, Oregon, California, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, and Minnesota.

The bride is a graduate of Lincoln high school and the secretarial course at the Thief River Falls AVTI. Prior to her marriage, she was employed in the footwear and sporting goods department at K-Mart. The groom is a graduate of Washington high school and Fort McClellan and Fort Rucker aviation school in Alabama. He is stationed with the U.S. Army Aviation Corps as an Air-Traffic controller in Germany.

The couple will be making their home in Landstaul, Germany. Photo, R. L. Neiland studio, Thief River Falls.

municipal utility company would be required to pay $50. Preliminary estimate was that the power company would make $209.38 on the average customer utilizing the service over four months. In addition, Minnkota would also provide matching funds for advertising the promotion, up to $400.

Mayor Bob Carlson reported that the Pennington county board had voted 5-0 to reject council's recommendations for lowering values on the former Arctic Enterprises property owned by Minstar Inc., and also on the Consumers Coop property. Minstar representatives were reportedly not satisfied with the amount of the reduction, and have threatened not to pay the assessment due this year. Concern was expressed over the future of Arctco Inc., which is currently leasing space from Minstar. County board has called a public hearing on the matter for 7 p.m. Thursday, July 21. Carlson reported that Arctco was rumored to have received offers to move their operation to another city.

In other business, the council approved service contracts between the city and attorneys Wurst, McDowell and Ihle; and between the city and Norwest Bank, for administration of loan contracts between the city and Arctco Inc. and United Satellite Systems. Loans are being made by the city to encourage job development, under a revolving loan program developed with the aid of a state grant. City Planner Jack Quinlivan noted that the two companies had requested changes in the agreements, to designate the money to be used for purchase of new equipment rather than for equipment and new construction. Although approved by council, the changes will be subject to approval by the state.

Amount of the loans, made at 6 per cent interest, was $300,000 to Arctco and $79,326 to United Satellite Systems. A third loan of $97,000 is still available, pending action by Hydra-Mac Inc.

Authorization was granted to building inspector Bob Bregier to have houses torn down which were felt to be a safety hazard. Bregier noted that a number of buildings which had been repossessed had been condemned, but owners had expressed reluctance to invest money to have them torn down. Council instructed him to proceed, but advised that city forces should not be used unless no bids were received from private contractors. Cost of demolition is to be born by the property owners, as an assessment on taxes. If property becomes tax forfeit, the city has first option to purchase it for taxes due.

Bids were approved for roofing of three city buildings. Low bidder was Northwestern Co. of Thief River Falls, with a total base bid of $24,691.76. Individual bids were $16,869.01 for the city auditorium; $3,113.55 for the front of the old arena; and $4,709 for the Stewart and Walker building. Bids were for use of a single membrane rubber material, which was recommended by engineer Dave Kildahl due to contours on the auditorium roof. Second low bidder was Hjelle Roofing Co., Newfolden. Seven bids were received.

Resolution was approved appointing Alderman Ken Murphy to a joint powers committee being formed to coordinate movement of solid waste among several counties. Although the committee is being formed by counties interested in the Bagley incinerator project, no obligation to continue on with that project was involved in joining the joint powers committee. Murphy said that the committee might assist the county in developing a plan for management of solid waste, and enable grant money to be made available for the study. He questioned whether the Bagley proposal would be able to compete economically with use of the landfill, expressing an interest in seeing what type of a proposal Grand Forks, ND had to offer.

In other business the council:

— Approved codification of city ordinances, which was described by City Attorney Bob Wurst as "housekeeping changes to incorporate the 60 some ordinances passed since the procedure was last done;"

— Approved the mayor's appointment of the finance committee to handle disposition of the Carnegie Library building. Alderman Jim Womack noted that the committee would be accepting proposals from persons interested in purchasing the building, but that their decision would be strongly influenced by the plans for use of the building. Alderman Milan Borsheim voted against the appointment, expressing the opinion that the matter should be a decision for the building committee.

— Approved declaration of police property, including 40 bicycles, as abandoned, and establishing August 16 as the date for auction of surplus city property;

— Granted a permit for the Best Western Inn to have an outdoor beer garden with alcoholic beverages and live music from 5 p.m. to midnight on July 16.

— Granted a permit for a rock and roll concert and dance at the Pennington county fair grandstand from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Thursday, July 21. Concert will be held at the armory if weather is bad.

— Heard that seven of eight city employees eligible for early retirement benefits have accepted the city's offer. They are Fire Chief Duane Noel; Police Officer Irving Swanson; utilities employees Harry Jasperson, Clarence Breiland, Hazel Cloutier, and Paul Bedard; and Burton Cook, street department. City Clerk Gerald Wigness noted that the offer would pay the retiring employees $10 for each month of full time employment with the city.

— Heard that the volunteer firefighters had increased their pension from $10,000 to $20,000 lump sum;

— Approved payment of bills including $63,681.51 to Ehrenstrom Construction for final payment on the 1982 street improvement project; $497 to Fred's Cab for senior citizen subsidies from June 1 to July 1; $89,433.50 to R.E. Nelsen for completed water plant work; $2,772 to Black and Veatch for resident engineering services; and $2,325.51 for construction phases on the water plant project; and $600 to Howard Nelson, week inspector.

Wheat Growers Hold District 2 Meet July 21

Wheat growers are being urged to attend the district two meeting of the Minnesota association of wheat growers Thursday, July 21, at the Northland lodge in Crookston. Meeting will begin at 2 p.m. District two includes the counties of Polk, Red Lake and Pennington.

According to wheat grower district director, Rick Baird of Red Lake Falls, the program during the two-hour session will include discussions on the activities of the Minnesota wheat growers and the check-off funded Minnesota wheat council.

Of special interest is the presentation to be given by Glenn Samson, program director for the international market development organization, U.S. wheat associates, based in Washington, D.C. Samson supervises the market development program for U.S. wheat as carried out through the thirteen foreign offices that U.S. wheat maintains throughout the world. He will be discussing the challenges and opportunities facing wheat producing in moving additional grain into the export market.

Other program participants will include Merle Hedland, executive director for the Minnesota wheat growers, as well as other staff members. Also, Don Loeslie, president of the national association of wheat growers, Warren, will be present to review national agricultural policy. Loeslie will have just returned from the agricultural summit meeting called by Secretary of Agriculture John Block, and will be reporting on that meeting as well as other issues.

Also present will be a representative of agricultural insurance administrators, the administrative group that handles the wheat grower endorsed grain growers membership and insurance trust. He will be discussing and answering questions on the health insurance program being offered to wheat growers in 10 primary wheat states.

According to Baird, the meeting is open to all wheat growers, members and non-members alike.

USDA Adjusts Food Stamp Income Limits

Starting July 1, the income eligibility limits for people who use food stamps will increase, reflecting changes in the cost of living since last year, according to Mary C. Jarratt, assistant secretary of agriculture.

Under the new guidelines, a family of four can have a gross income of $1,073 a month and still be eligible for assistance. Previously, the monthly income limit was $1,008.

Food stamp program currently provides food help to 22.5 million Americans.

Congress requires USDA to update the eligibility guidelines each July 1 according to changes in the consumer price index.

William Hueg Resigns 'U' M Ag Position

William F. Hueg, who is credited with much of the recent development on the University of Minnesota St. Paul campus, has resigned as deputy vice president and Dean of the Institute of agriculture, forestry and home economics.

Hueg, 59, whose resignation from the top post at the institute went into effect June 30, will remain at the university working with the agriculture future fund, the institute's development arm, until he retires at the end of the year. Richard Sauer, who had been director of the agricultural experiment station, will assume the duties of deputy vice president for the institute and will remain director of the experiment station under a reorganization of the institute.

Hueg's resignation, Sauer's appointment and the reorganization of the institute are subject to approval by the board of regents.

"My leaving now will help to put this new structure promptly into place," Hueg said. "This shift, six months before my official leave from the university, makes a great deal of sense for the institute, the university, Dr. Sauer and myself. This should be a very smooth transition."

Reorganization, which has been planned during the past year, places additional responsibility on the director of the experiment station, who heads the St. Paul campus office and oversees the seven branches across the state. "Since research is a bridging mechanism across the three collegiate units of the institute as well as other units of the university, this seemed a logical move," said Kenneth Keller, vice president for academic affairs. "The deputy vice president will be a strong liaison for my office with the existing collegiate units in the institute."

Hueg, a native of New York, came to the university in 1957 as an assistant professor and extension agronomist. In 1962 he became assistant director of the experiment station and was named director in 1966. In June 1974 he was appointed the first deputy vice president and dean of the institute.

Under his leadership as director and deputy vice president, funding for programs sponsored through the experiment station grew from $3.2 million a year to around $34 million this year. The St. Paul campus also grew physically under Hueg's guidance. Buildings for biochemistry and animal science were constructed and an agronomy, plant genetics, soils and plant pathology building is now under construction.

New Business Filings Rise In Minnesota

Secretary of state's office offered good news today on Minnesota's fast improving business climate. Joan Growe, whose office handles business registrations for the state, reported 4,066 new filings in the first half of 1983, an increase of more than 17 per cent over last year.

"The good news for Minnesotans is that new businesses are forming at an even faster rate than in 1982, a year in which our new business performance was substantially better than the region," said Growe. "I'd say we're back-on-track in Minnesota, and looking for a lot of new business throughout the state."

According to figures Growe obtained from Dun and Bradstreet, new incorporations increased to 7,443 in 1981 in Minnesota while at the same time, they decreased to 6,179 in Wisconsin, 4,221 in Iowa, 1,023 in North Dakota, and 809 in South dakota.

Growe also pointed out that in 1982 a record number of corporations from other states applied to her office for authority to do business in Minnesota. "It is a good sign," Growe said, "when businesses are coming to Minnesota from other states, as did 906 in 1982."

In addition, Growe said that a record number of proprieterships, partnerships, and limited partnerships were formed in the state last year. "There were over 14,000 new businesses formed in Minnesota last year, which leads me to the conclusion that Minnesota has many good things to offer business and that word is spreading," Growe concluded.

SWCD Board, Staff Visit No-Till Farm

Board members and staff of the Marshall-Beltrami soil and water conservation district at Grygla recently attended a tour of the no-till farm of Jim McCutcheon at Homewood, Manitoba.

They joined with 25 other farmers and conservation people from northwestern Minnesota on a bus tour to McCutcheon's farm. At the farm, McCutcheon discussed his 10 years of no-till farming and some of his methods. According to Ralph Rundell, soil conservation technician at Grygla, McCutcheon told of the conservation value of no-till farming.

McCutcheon farms three quarters of land and has not owned a plow for the past five years and has not plowed any of his land in the last 10 years. His crop yields are about equal to his neighbors who use conventional farming methods. He feels that his main gain is in lower equipment costs and in the fact that his soils have increased in organic matter content and have no appreciable wind erosion.

As the state heart fund chairman, Nelson will provide leadership and guidance in the coordination of the annual heart fund campaign. Conducted year round, the state heart fund campaign is highlighted in February with its house-to-house campaign.

Formula For Comparing Egg Prices Given

With high prices nibbling away at the food budget, eggs are considered one of today's best food buys. Although most eggs sold in supermarkets are large size, there are often specials on other sizes and it helps to have a rule of thumb to figure out which size is the best buy. Here's that rule:

First, find the difference in price between the two sizes you're comparing. Then divide the price of a carton of large eggs by 8. If this number is the same as the difference in price, the eggs are of equal value in either size.

If the number is higher than the price difference between the two sizes, the larger size is the better buy. If the number is lower than the price difference between the two sizes, the smaller size is the better buy.

Here are a couple of examples:

If large eggs are 95 cents per dozen and extra large eggs are $1.05 per dozen, which is the better buy? $1.05 minus 95 cents equals 10 cents (price difference); 95 divided by 8 equals 12 (magic number). The number 12 is higher than the price difference so the extra large eggs are the better buy.

If large eggs are 80 cents per dozen. Medium eggs are 69 cents per dozen, which is the better buy? 80 cents minus 69 cents equals 11 cents (price difference); 80 divided by 8 equals 10 (magic number). The number 10 is lower than the price difference, therefore the medium eggs are the better buy.

Tile Drainage Gains In Area Popularity

four feet or more. The soil in that area would permit a drainage pattern to the tile at a four-foot depth of about 50 feet on either side of the four-inch lateral lines. Permeability of the soil determines how wide an area the tile will drain. Tight soils such as clay would require closer tile spacing; loose soils such as peat would permit much wider spacing.

With the laser system on his equipment, Determan sets up the laser transmitter at a selected point in the field. It operates on a 360-degree basis. The light emitted by the transmitter is received by a mast on the trencher which is connected by computer to the hydraulic system. The signal is translated into the depth at which the machine is programmed to cut.

Why Farmers Haven't Tiled

William Penning, area extension agent for the University of Minnesota in Thief River Falls, said there have been several reasons why tiling hasn't been done extensively in this area. One is the fairly tight soil types prevalent in the area, which would require close spacing of tile and thereby increase the cost per acre of installation.

Another is the short growing season in this area of the state which does not permit farmers to grow crops which offer high per acre value, thereby reducing the probability of value return for tiling cost.

A third has been the general likelihood in northwestern Minnesota that the right amount of rain will fall at the right time, and that surface drainage ditches will adequately take care of the occasional moderate excess rainfall.

But Penning contends that there are many soil types in the area which could use tile drainage quite well and he expects to see much more tiling being done in this area. He said there certainly is a need to provide more crop root zone room by removal of excess water, and he added that the recently completed soils mapping of Pennington county should prove extremely valuable in helping farmers determine if their soil types are conducive to tile utilization.

Some Say Tiling Works

One advocate of tiling is Tom Smith who farms about two and one-half miles south of Oklee. Since 1979 he has installed about 30,000 feet of tile on his farm — primarily eight-inch and six-inch tile for mainline drainage. He expects to add laterals in the future as need and finances dictate.

Originally from the St. James area, Smith said he will tell anybody that tiling is as important as buying seed and fertilizer in a total farm production program. "I have come to the conclusion that if we had borrowed money for drainage instead of groceries we could have pulled a harvest out of our crops most of the past four years," he said. The Oklee area has been hard hit by untimely and excessive rainfall the past four crop years.

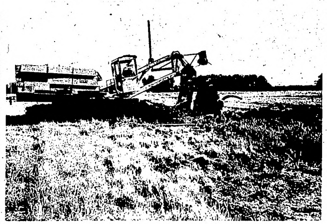
Smith also notes that he had a 20-acre "swamp" on his farm that he tiled and which is now his most consistently productive acreage. He also added that he has a quarter-section of corn for grain on a field which has been tiled. "Right now it looks like a decent crop," he said, "but without tiling there would have been nothing."

Charles Bachand of the Oklee area has also tiled about 200 acres and expects that he and his brother Mike may do more. While people experienced with tiling in other areas note that it often takes several years for the drainage pattern to develop in tiled areas, Bachand said tile on his farm worked almost immediately.

"We just put the tile in last year so we don't have much experience with it," he said. "But shortly after we put it in last year we had a heavy inch and a half of rain and 24 hours later the tile was flowing pretty good. That was impressive to me."

Bachand also said that removal of excess water from the soil is only one beneficial aspect he sees in tile drainage. He expects that muddy harvest seasons will be alleviated, providing savings in fuel and stress on equipment.

All of the people associated with field drainage tile noted that it is not a detriment to crops during dry years. The tile drains only the excess water beyond the soil's holding capacity — the water that fills the spaces between the soil particles. Further experience on a wider variety of soils and situations and continued advancements in tiling technology will determine if that system of drainage becomes commonplace in this area where it has been so long ignored by so many.



THIS MACHINE GOES where other field tiling equipment would be completely bogged down, according to owner Del Determan of Brooks Tile, Inc. The new machine was built in Holland and purchased through Canada and Determan claims it is the only one in the United States. At the top of the machine is a receiver unit which intercepts a laser beam and automatically controls depth to assure accurate drainage slope in the tile being laid (a 10 per cent grade or one-tenth foot per 100 feet of length). Note the boggy area at right in the photo through which the machine has just traveled.

FIELD DRAINAGE TILE is fed into the ground as a slotted trench is opened by the Barth Holland tiling machine owned by Brooks Tile, Inc. These views show the trench as it looks from the top of the machine's boom, and the machine with its digging shoe raised out of the ground. While tiling has been done for many years in other areas of the country, very little has been done in this part of the state. This tile was being placed on the Mike Rubischko farm formerly owned by Dave Bruggeman about four miles southeast of Thief River Falls.

routes have not been completely negotiated yet.

Inconvenience to traffic is expected to be minimal, according to Duininck, who notes that wider shoulders being established will allow traffic to pass during paving operations. Approximately 95,000 tons of gravel is expected to be required for the shoulder work.

Work within the city is expected to take about 25 days. Duininck hopes to begin with some storm sewer and pipe work by the latter part of next week, but expects minimal interference with traffic at that time. At the peak of construction, he stated that the town could expect crews in excess of 50 people, with 25 to 30 trucks hauling for about two weeks. He said they hope to put in 60 hours per week, without working Saturdays and Sundays. Duininck said they expect to have the job completed by the first of October, weather permitting.

Pat Hughes, assistant district engineer for MnDOT, reminded Duininck that a lot of public interest had been generated in the job, both through lobbying efforts which helped make it possible and through involvement in planning the portion within the city limits. He emphasized the importance of keeping the public informed of developments on the project.

82nd County Fair Offers Entertainment racing association. Admission will be $4 for adults and $2 for children 12 and younger.

While entry day has generally been a busy day at the sports arena and livestock barns but quiet at the grandstand, this year's Grandstand Jam on Thursday evening should change that image. Exhibits in 4-H club and open classes will still be accepted beginning at 9 a.m. with 4-H club conference judging to close at 3 p.m. and open class entries to remain open until 6 p.m. Flower judging will be done at 4 p.m. Two bands — 'Justin' Tyme" and "Escape" — will provide rock and roll music from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the fair's first Grandstand Jam. Admission to the grandstand show will be $3.50 in advance and $4 at the gate.

Livestock judging will take place on Friday, July 22, with the Charley Pride show in the evening. A schedule of judging times for livestock divisions is published in the county fair premium list.

Judging on Saturday will include a dog show by the arena at 1 p.m., open horse show halter class judging at 2 p.m., and 4-H club horse show and judging at 7:30 p.m. The 4-H horse show will be in front of the grandstand and there is no admission charge.

Saturday afternoon attraction will be a tractor pull which will feature local out-of-the-field tractors instead of the customized power units which have pulled here in the past couple of years. Included will be antique tractors of 1945 vintage and older. A special class for four-wheel-drive stock pickups is also being included with nearly a dozen entries already received in that category. Admission will be $4 for adults and $2 for children 12 and younger.

Sunday is designated as senior citizens day, when the free afternoon grandstand program at 2 p.m. will include the 4-H dress revue, entertainment by the "Hoot 'n' Toots" of the Viking community and the FFA safe tractor driving contest along with senior recognition activities.

Night grandstand program will be the Jaycee-sponsored demolition derby beginning at 6:30 p.m. Admission will be $4 for adults and $2 for children 12 and younger (note the change from $5 and $3 listed in the county fair premium list).

Board chairman Swanson encouraged livestock exhibitors to use the south entrance to the fairgrounds off highway 59 only on entry day Thursday and for removal of livestock on Sunday, July 24. "This entrance is an emergency entrance and is to be used only during the above times," Swanson said. "Arena exhibitors are to use the east entrance to the fairgrounds and public entrance will be permitted only through the east and west entrances."

Participants in the harness racing, demolition derby and tractor and pickup pulling contests are asked to use the northwest entrance off Sixth street only.

Pioneer Experience Of Engelstads Is Recalled

(Editor's Note: This is the third part of a series involving the history of Peder and Mathilde Engelstad, pioneer residents of the Thief River Falls community. The writer, Melvin Engelstad, is the youngest of three surviving children of Peder and Mathilde and arranged the recent reunion of descendants which attracted nearly 400 people in Thief River Falls.)

Peder and Kjos Search for Good Quality Poplar Logs

Peder planned to add another room to the house, and he was seeking better logs for the project than those remaining on his land. It was late in the fall, and there was enough snow to make it possible to use a sleigh, so he and Kjos drove to the Indian Reservation, several miles east of the homestead, where some of the neighbors reported that they had obtained excellent poplar logs.

They were driving Duke — only two years old — with large, muscular Lane, and the combination was comparable to that of a cow and her little calf. Duke managed only to hold up his end of the neckyoke, while Lane drew the entire load. It had been necessary to butcher Bright due to an injured foot, so Duke was being initiated into the role of worker at an early age.

They cut down several trees, trimmed them, loaded the logs on the sleigh, and started homeward. After having gone only a short distance, several Indians surrounded them, rolled the logs to the ground, took the team and sleigh, and soon were out of sight behind brush and trees, leaving Kjos and Peder to walk home empty-handed.

Mathilde cried for Duke! She had raised him from a newborn calf! Next morning the men went to Thief River Falls where they called upon John Baptiste LaBree, who agreed to act as interpreter for them. (Mr. LaBree's son, W. Jesse LaBree, one of 12 children, would serve as County Sheriff for 12 years in the early 1900's.) They were informed by some of the Chippewas living near the Chief's Section that the oxen were farther north along the river and would be returned upon the payment of $25 in cash and $50 in provisions such as meat, butter and eggs.

Coming back to their homes, the two men sought the cooperation of their neighbors, many of whom had acquired needed logs in this manner without any apparent objection by the Indians. The required provisions soon were assembled, with Peder contributing one-half of recently butchered Bright. Two days later, with John Baptiste LaBree again accompanying them, Peder and Kjos delivered the requested cash and provisions, and the oxen were promptly turned over to them. Duke and Lane were no worse for their experience, and at the farm they received an affectionate welcome from Mathilde.

Reviewing this incident, and recalling the embarrassment of their fish trap experience, Peder and Kjos were both convinced of the necessity of distinguishing between facts and hearsay to avoid violating the rights of other people. In the spring of 1887, both men cut the needed supply of logs on their own premises; while not as choice as those on the reservation, they were satisfactory — and the south room was added!

Peder Works to Complete Digging on a Crib Well

Down in the ground at a depth of 34 feet, Peder was in the third day of drilling by himself with no indication of whether or not water would be found, when the drill suddenly broke through hardpan and dropped four feet. Sand and water gushed through the opening with a roar, covering the bottom of the well and mounting upward.

Clutching the drill and other tools, Peder climbed to the ledge and straddled the 3-foot space at the 24-foot depth. He called for help and clung to the rope that was suspended into the well. The water kept rising. Mathilde heard his cries and came to the rescue in time to see the water going over the top of Peder's boots. The tools were quickly hauled to the surface in a bucket; then, Peder, wet to the waist, with the help of the rope and Mathilde, reached the top.

"It was not panic," said Peder, "it was a joy to look down at that gratifying sight of rising water that rose to a level of four feet above the ledge (24-foot depth), and there it has held its constant mark of fourteen feet of water during all these years."

Erection of a Community Hall

A community building, Valhall, was erected during 1896 on an acre of land, donated for that purpose, in the southwest part of Peder's homestead. It was built by volunteer labor after the Valhall Association had borrowed $300 from Ole Ronning for the purchase of the building material. The Valhall building dimensions were 48'x24', and the lumber bill was discharged readily by income from dances, raffles, basket socials, and the sale of soft drinks and cigars.

Children Enjoy Riding on the Wagon With Dad

It was a customary sight to see Peder with his oxen or a team of horses returning from a trip to town or doing general work around the farm with several happy children, from two to 14 years of age, perched around him on the wagon thoroughly enjoying themselves. Peder recalled such a ride when one of the wheels dropped suddenly into a rut and dumped all of his passengers into the brush beside the road. There were no serious injuries, but many scratches and minor bruises, some crying and much concern, with Peder sharing most of the latter.

The Tragic Death of Mary, Six-Year-Old Daughter

Later in the year, Mary, who was now six, developed a severe case of whooping cough. The older children had gone through their sieges of coughing and had recovered under the watchful care of home medication of Mathilde, but it was decided to call a doctor from Thief River Falls with the hope that he would be able to give the child some immediate relief.

He placed ice-water compresses on her chest, and the child began coughing and struggling for breath. She suffocated within minutes, and the swelling that resulted was so great that a ring, made of beads, burst from her finger sending the little pellets rolling across the floor. A tragic and heart-rending episode — tragic because the death seemed to be due to failure of professional skill — heartrending because the child had been entrusted out of the hands of Mathilde, who, in the final analysis, blamed herself for having permitted this fate to come to her child.

Painful thoughts swirled through Mathilde's mind as she bathed and dressed her little daughter for the last time. Not many hours before, she had felt warm in her arms — now she was still and lifeless! Oh, why, she cried to herself, had the doctor been called! Blinded momentarily by tears, she sat on the bed, kissed her daughter, and said, "Tilgi mamma!" (Forgive mamma!) Mary died on Nov. 8, 1896, and two days later, she was laid to rest in a homemade casket at the side of her brother Kristian in the little cemetery on the farm.

Peder paid the doctor for his call, not with money, but with a light sleigh, a very useful vehicle for one who travels about the countryside during the winter. The payment was appreciated, and Peder was told by the doctor, "I don't feel I should collect very much because I didn't do much good out there!" For Mathilde, the sting remained intense; upon seeing the doctor on the street, she would cross to the other side to avoid meeting him.

Some years later, after the doctor had moved from Thief River Falls, it was learned that he had been convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to prison! A surge of deep emotion brought tears to their eyes as they saw, so clearly again, that pathetic scene of their daughter's struggle for breath, as she died in the presence of three helpless adults — her parents and a practicing physician.

Peder Becomes Insurance Agent

Peder became an agent for the Bray Insurance company in 1900 and served the farmers in this capacity during the rest of his lifetime — over 42 years — writing policies covering their crops and buildings, collecting premiums, and handling adjustments for damage incurred.

Steps Taken to Improve Dairy Herd

Peder took another step in the direction of building up his dairy herd in 1904 when he acquired the purebred Guernsey sire, Ashton, for $75 from Professor T.B. Haecker of the agricultural college at St. Paul.

With a silo full of fodder, 30 milk cows, and a large number of young stock in the herd, Peder was now definitely establishing himself in the dairy business. His number of dairy animals continued to grow, as did his desire for more and better feed for the stock. Alfalfa and corn acreages were increased each year, and in 1906 the second silo was erected at the south end of the log barn across the road.

Sale of Farm Products Provides Steady Income

Eggs and homemade butter were being sold to stores at Thief River Falls, St. Hilaire, and Red Lake Falls, and even though prices were very low at times, these products provided a steady, dependable income. Butter prices fluctuated from five cents a jar (one pound) in the summertime to 12 or 13 cents during the winter months, while eggs varied from five cents to 15 cents a dozen.

Considering the meager, uncertain remuneration for other farm products, however, plus his growing conviction that the Red River Valley was ideally suited for dairying, Peder was impressed with the necessity of organizing a cooperative creamery association among the farmers of the community to meet the growing demand for dairy products from an ever-widening market.

Thief River Cooperative Creamery Association Organized

W.W. Prichard had established a creamery in 1901, which had proved to be unprofitable, chiefly due to the bad roads that made it difficult and expensive to obtain milk and cream from the farmers. When he heard of the movement among the farmers, Mr. Prichard was interested at once in selling his plant to them. He appraised his property at $5,000, and Peder's offer of $4,500 was accepted.

Professor James Wilson, who had spoken so optimistically of the future for dairy cattle in this part of Minnesota, joined Peder in calling on farmers to interest them in the purchase of stock in the new cooperative enterprise. Shares were sold at $25 each granting the owner voting privileges and an opportunity to share in the profits of the organization; a levy of one cent a pound on butterfat was deducted from the shareholders' checks, creating a sinking fund for the repair and maintenance of equipment. Only one vote was allowed per stockholder regardless of number of shares held, and about 100 farmers invested in the organization.

The first meeting was held in 1907 in the old creamery building when directors were elected and the official name, Thief River Cooperative Creamery Association, was adopted. Officers elected to serve during this first year were as follows: Peder Engelstad, president; John L. Fincke, secretary; Lars J. Parbst, treasurer; R.L. Muzzy, vice president. When the books were closed at the end of the year, it was found that the association had incurred a deficit of $800.

By the time of the second annual meeting in 1908, the Thief River Cooperative Creamery had established itself as a sound business venture, and Peder was elected unanimously to the office of secretary, for which he was paid an annual salary of $221.45. Peder served in this position for 13 years, during which time his compensation increased gradually from that total yearly amount of $221.45 to $150 a month. In 1922, he was appointed to the Board of Directors of Land O' Lakes District 17 and served as its secretary for 18 years.

Grain Progress Rapid Where Weather Allows

Rainy, cloudy weather and violent storms kept farmers out of the fields for much of the past week, according to the Minnesota agricultural statistics service. An average of only two days were suitable for fieldwork. Sloughs in low areas from rains of the past several weeks persisted due to additional rains, notably in the Meeker, Stearns, and Benton county area and parts of the northwest district.

Pastures are in very good condition and most field crops and hay are growing fast. A lot of hay has been cut for a week or more but is still on the fields, with almost no days fit for baling. Small grains are not very tall but are progressing rapidly. Corn and soybeans are in good condition where farmers were able to get in before the heavy rains for some cultivating, fertilizing, and spraying; however, weeds have gotten ahead of many other growers who have not had machinery in the fields since planting time. Topsoil moisture of of July 1 was rated 38 per cent adequate and 62 per cent surplus.

Only 66 per cent of field corn has been cultivated one of more times, compared with the five year average of 88 per cent. Height of the corn at 18" is the same as 1982 but behind the 5 year average of 23". Condition of corn is rated five per cent poor, 42 per cent fair, and 53 per cent good to excellent. Soybean cultivation has reached 48 per cent compared with 77 per cent for the five-year average. Soybeans are now eight inches tall versus seven inches a year ago and nine inches for the five-year average.

Nearly all the small grain has now reached or passed joint stage. Spring wheat if 92 per cent jointing compared with 87 per cent for the five-year average. Jointing stands at 95 per cent for both oats and barley versus five-year averages of 91 per cent for oats and 88 per cent for barley. Spring wheat if 57 per cent heading, the same as the five-year average and ahead of last year's 44 per cent. Oats are 63 per cent heading compared with 54 per cent a hear ago and 65 per cent for the five-year average. Oats condition is rated 40 per cent poor to fair, 53 per cent good and five per cent excellent. Barley if 68 per cent heading versus 49 per cent last year and the five-year average of 63 per cent.

Sunflowers are 64 per cent cultivated versus 79 per cent for the five-year average. Sunflower height of 10 inches compares with eight inches in 1982 and 13 inches for the five-year average. Alfalfa hay first crop is getting cut slowly; an estimated 77 per cent has been cut versus 91 per cent last year and 88 per cent for the five-year average.

Farmers Ask Fast Action On Disaster Loans

Farmers and rural business people holding a special meeting in Red Lake Falls July 5 expressed frustration and anger with the federal administration for the slow and cumbersome process being followed by USDA's Farmers Home administration (FmHA) in processing disaster claims filed three months ago, following designation of Marshall, Pennington, Polk and Red Lake counties of Minnesota as federal disaster areas this spring.

The four counties experienced their fourth straight year of excess moisture this spring, stunting crop growth in this major wheat growing area. Other crops produced in this area include barley, oats and some sunflowers and sugarbeets. Excessive moisture, which has been a problem for the past four years, prevented harvests in 1981 and 1982. Estimates for this year are that at a minimum, 20 to 40 per cent of the crops will be lost due to heavy rains and standing water.

FmHA disaster loans are made to farmers in designated areas, with low interest rates and extended pay-back periods. This is desirable, according to the Minnesota Farmers Union, because without harvest or by losing their crops to moisture, the farmers need the loan funds to pay their input costs and other bills.

In addition to not knowing whether their disaster loan applications will be denied or accepted, the more than 40 farmers and rural business people said some local lenders are now reducing credit availability because of FmHA's slow response to covering claims.

Following the meeting, chaired by Red Lake Falls are farmer Willard Brunelle, the farmers called on the Reagan administration to speed up and process claims made this spring, and to free up the FmHA funds appropriated for this purpose.

If the administration does not act, the farmers said they will call on Congress to require action from USDA.

Brunelle and Minnesota Farmers Union president Cy Carpenter were designated at the meeting to meet July 6 with Minnesota's Seventh district Congressman Arlan Stangeland, to urge action.

One of the best-kept secrets every summer is the Northwest League American Legion baseball standings. This year is no different, and with the advent of the new two-class playoff system in the Ninth District this summer the small amount of interest given to the Northwest League regular season standings has lessened even further.

This year's Northwest League line-up includes Thief River Falls, East Grand Forks, Crookston, Roseau, Karlstad, Warroad and Hallock. While Thief River Falls, East Grand Forks and Crookston are playing a regular season league schedule, they won't be involved in the post-season playoff that qualifies its top two finishers for district tournament competition since they will be grouped with Moorhead, Detroit Lakes and Fergus Falls to comprise the Ninth District Class AA tournament field. Roseau, Karlstad, Warroad and Hallock will compete for Ninth District Class A tournament berths.

Ironically, this year's Northwest League race could be one of the closest finishes in history. Normally Thief River Falls, East Grand Forks and Crookston dominate the league. Over the last 13 years only Newfolden and Roseau have been able to crack the Thief River Falls-East Grand Forks-Crookston hold on first place. Newfolden won a pennant in 1971 while Roseau shared the crown with East Grand Forks in 1974. During that stretch Thief River Falls won five regular season Northwest League titles and shared another; Crookston won four out-right titles and shared it once; and East Grand Forks shared three pennants.

Thief River Falls is the defending regular season Northwest League champion. This year, though, Thief River Falls is only 5-3 in league play where all three Class AA-playing teams have taken their lumps from the smaller towns.

Warroad, for example, beat East Grand Forks twice this summer. Warroad also looked good in a runner-up finish at the Thief River Falls invitational tournament a couple of weeks ago, losing to Thief River Falls 5-1 in the finals. Sunday, however, Crookston handled them 10-5 and 13-3 in a one-sided doubleheader. Lefthander Craig Stahlecker struck out 14 Warroad batters in the opener, although he did give up eight hits and eight walks.

Crookston, a 6-2 winner over Thief River Falls earlier this summer, has split with Karlstad, a team that has also split with Thief River Falls, winning a 2-0 decision here recently. Thief River Falls and East Grand Forks have also split a pair of regular season meetings.

Roseau, scheduled to be here tonight (Wednesday) for a 7 p.m. game, normally is a factor in the race, too. So outside of Hallock, everybody seems to be quite competitive and evenly matched. It's too bad nobody has any idea what the standings look like.

That Class AA Ninth District tournament will be played at Moorhead July 28-31. The six-team, double-elimination affair was originally scheduled to be held at one of the three northern sites — East Grand Forks, Crookston or Thief River Falls — but was unexplainably switched to Moorhead, much to the chagrin of the area clubs.

East Grand Forks, Crookston and Thief River Falls all have excellent baseball facilities and would have like to host the tournament. Thief River Falls up-graded its fairgrounds diamond remarkably over the last couple of years and did an excellent job hosting the Ninth District tournament last summer. We called it the best baseball diamond in northwestern Minnesota, but Warren Strandell disputed that claim in the East Grand Forks Exponent.

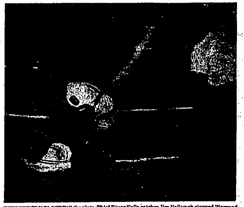
"In honesty, we can't take issue with the claim because we haven't seen the TRF facility in a while," noted Strandell, "but, we can compliment (the East Grand Forks park and recreation department) for developing Stauss into one of the best parks around."

"Crookston, too, has a first class facility," added Strandell. "In combination the fields complement each other, giving this area a choice of sites for tournament play."

And yet, not one of the sites was selected for the Ninth District Class AA tournament. The Ninth District Class A event had a site change, too, from expected New York Mills selection to Battle Lake. That'll be an eight-team, double-elimination tournament. The Class A and Class AA winner will meet in a 2-out-of-3 game series for the Ninth District title and a berth in the 1983 American Legion state tournament August 12-15 in New Ulm.

Miscellaneous

+ Local golfers have done well in recent area tournaments. Jay Moum was the winners in the annual Fourth of July shortstop tournament in Minakwa Country Club in Crookston, with Marv Carlson taking the consolation title in the championship flight and Ken Moum winning the first flight. Meanwile, Vi Johnson and Gladys Narverud of Thief River Falls won the first and second flights, respectively, at the Warren women's invitational tournament while Eric Charlson of Thief River Falls was the 15-year-old age group title winner at the Ray Richard junior golf tournament in Grand Forks.



EFFECTIVELY BLOCKING the plate, Thief River Falls catcher Jim Hallamek stopped Warroad runner Ken Knutson's slide Tuesday and tagged him out as he tried to score from second base on a double to right-center by Dion Hebel in the first inning of Tuesday's American Legion baseball game played on the fairgrounds diamond. Centerfielder Kirk Jenson got the ball to second baseman Tim Bottem, who put the relay throw to the plate on Hallamek's glove. Umpire Tom Goddard watched the action. Thief River Falls won the game 13-3 in six innings.

Babe Ruth Prep Team Has 25-1 Record . . .

TRF 13-Year-Olds Seeking State Tournament Berth

Thief River Falls, 25-1 for the year, and the No. 1-seeded team, will receive a first round bye when the 1983 Lake Agassiz District 7 Prep Babe Ruth baseball tournament for 13-year-olds gets underway Friday at East Grand Forks.

Winners of the five-team, double-elimination tournament will get a state tournament berth. Thief River Falls' first district game will be Friday at 3 p.m. A win there puts them into Saturday's semifinals at 10 a.m., with a loss moving Thief River Falls into the 12:30 p.m. loser's bracket game Saturday. Sunday's finals are scheduled for 1 p.m., matching Saturday's 10 a.m. winner vs. the survivor in the loser's bracket. A second game in the finals, if needed, would be played at 3 Sunday afternoon.

Thief River Falls, under first-year coach Doug Henke has not lost since a 26-6 setback to host Warroad in the finals of an invitational tournament played there June 16-17.

Last week a Moorhead doubleheader was added to toughen the Thief River Falls schedule, but the string of easy wins continued with 19-6 and 10-4 decisions Tuesday. Then followed four of the season's closest games, a 9-8, 4-3 doubleheader win over Crookston Wednesday and a 10-9, 19-15 sweep over Roseau Friday.

Tuesday, Thief River Falls beat East Grand Forks 16-1 and 13-2 to close out the regular season schedule.

Henke, a 19-year-old 1982 Red Lake Falls high school graduate and a Northland community college sophomore-to-be, doubles as the Red Lake Falls American Legion coach this summer. There have been some conflicts, but they seem to work themselves out. He said it's easier to coach the older, more experienced Legion players, but has found more enjoyment and more success at the Babe Ruth level.

He's using this summer as a lesson in experience since he hopes some day to be a teacher-coach. "I've learned a lot," admitted Henke, who just a year ago was playing Legion baseball at Red Lake Falls. "I got too old for that, so they made me a coach," he joked. "I think I'd rather be coaching, anyway. I enjoy it. But maybe I got spoiled (with the one-loss season), too."

Unlike most winning teams who rely on good defense, Henke confesses that "defense has been the weakest part of our game." He's quick to point out, though, that the rest of the team's "game" is excellent and even though the defense isn't as good as, say the offense, it is still above average.

Hitting has been a real plus, he noted. "Hitting has been our strength. Everybody is hitting the ball," he noted.

Pitching-wise, Thief River Falls relies mostly on Chris Nelson, who has an impressive curve ball, and Kurt Dupree, who throws straight and hard.

Yesterday, both Nelson and Dupree pitched and limited East Grand Forks to just three hits in two games while the winners were banging out 19 hits.

Nelson pitched the first four innings for the win and Dupree finished up in the 16-1 opening win as Thief River Falls scored six times in the first inning. Mike Bendickson was 3-for-5 to pace the 12-hit attack while Chris Bjorgaard and Scott Vedbraaten were both 2-for-3. East Grand Forks got just one hit.

Nelson was also the winning pitcher in the 13-2 second-game victory, going the first three innings before Dupree pitched the final frames. Thief River Falls had a 5-1 lead through four innings, then broke it open with four-run bursts in the fifth and sixth innings. Bjorgaard and Billy Dicken were both 2-for-3 as Thief River Falls had a 7-2 base hit edge.

Pairings haven't yet been decided for the District 7 tournament, with a final regular season game today (Wednesday) matching East Grand Forks and Crookston determining final positions. The winner will tie Warroad for second place, with the loser finishing fourth.

No. 5-seeded Roseau plays the No. 4 finisher at 10 a.m. Friday, with the No. 2-3 game set for 12:30 p.m. and No. 1-seeded Thief River Falls playing the Roseau-No. 4 winner at 3.

Games continue with a loser's bracket match Friday at 6:30 p.m. Saturday's games start with a 10 a.m. winner's bracket game and includes loser's bracket games at 12:30 and 4 p.m. Finals would be played Sunday at 1 p.m.

Warroad Errors Hand TRF Easy 13-3 Legion Victory

Warroad American Legion baseball coach Penny Nash has this re-occurring nightmare in which his team self-destructs on the playing field. It happened again Tuesday as Warroad players bumbled their way through 12 errors in a 13-3 six-inning Northwest League defeat at the hands of host Thief River Falls.

Warroad had gained a measure of respect this summer with a 6-3 record, which included a pair of wins over perennial Northwest League challenger East Grand Forks. However, their image was tarnished a bit Sunday in a 10-5, 13-3 doubleheader loss to Crookston. "That was a nightmare," recalled Nash. "This one was much the same. We're in a tailspin right now."

It started and ended in opposite fashion. Warroad banged out three hits and scored twice in the top of the first inning when Thief River Falls appeared to be caught napping. A game-opening error was followed by a single by Ken Knutson; an RBI double to the left field fence by Dion Hebel, who went to third on a throw to the plate; and an RBI on an infield ground-out by Brad Nash. Son Shaugoby also had a double in there before Thief River Falls pitcher Kerry Wollin could get out of the inning.

However, Warroad mustered just one hit and one unearned run the rest of the way when Matt Knox walked in the second inning, moved up on a sacrifice bunt by Mark Boucha and a single by Kevin Olson, scoring on a throwing error as Olson stole second base.

Meanwhile, Thief River Falls had tied the game 2-2 in the bottom of the first. The stage was set for Warroad's terrible defensive show when lead-off batter Jim Hallamek wound up at second base when third baseman Roger Lien committed two errors on the same play. Hallamek was replaced on the bases by Brian Kemnitz on a fielder's choice play, with Kemnitz going to third on a hard-hit single up the middle by Tim Bottem and scored on a wild pitch. Bottem later scored on a ground ball single through the left side of the infield by Wollin, who finished the night 3-for-4 with four RBI's.

Thief River Falls, after falling behind again, 3-2, scored three times on three Warroad errors in the third to go ahead 5-3. Bottem singled to center to start it and scored when Wollin's single rolled past Boucha in centerfield for two extra bases. Back-to-back throwing errors by Lien at third on balls hit by Al Ness and Kirk Jenson scored two more runs.

Those type of things — plays that cause the nightmares for Nash — continued into the fourth when three more Warroad errors led to four more Thief River Falls runs. There was an RBI on a ground-out by Wollin and a run-scoring double by Ness in there, but errors at shortstop, first base and left field contributed to the 9-3 score.

Wollin hit a two-out, two-run home run over the right field fence in the fifth in the only inning Warroad didn't commit an error, but the visitors had two mis-plays in the sixth when Hallamek finally ended it on the ten-run-rule with a long RBI single to the left field fence.

"We didn't play that well, but we had a lot of gifts," confessed Thief River Falls coach Nick Drees. "They had trouble," he said in an understatement.

All 16 Thief River Falls players saw action. Warroad, 6-6, only had a nine-man roster.

Thief River Falls, 14-6 overall and 5-3 in the Northwest League, will host Roseau tonight (Wednesday) and will visit Hallock Thursday in 7 p.m. Northwest League games. Thief River Falls closes out its 1983 home schedule Friday with a 6 p.m. doubleheader against the Grand Forks Royals.

TRF Hosts Twins Clinic On Friday

Touring Minnesota Twins youth baseball clinic will appear in Thief River Falls Friday at 5 p.m.

Headed by longtime scout Angelo Giuliani, the Twins' clinic program is nearing the end of a 1983 summer schedule that includes Friday-Saturday stops in 24 communities throughout the Upper Midwest during May, June and July.

Giuliani and his clinic partners Glenn Gostick and Mike Casey form one of the top instructional teams anywhere, say Twins club officials. They focus their 90-minute programs, which feature participation by all the youngsters in attendance, upon the game's fundamentals.

It's estimated that some half-million kids have attended the clinics since the program's inception in 1961.

Friday's clinic in Thief River Falls, which is open to boys and girls of all ages, will be presented free of charge in the vicinity of the sports arena at the fairgrounds. The fairgrounds diamond will not be used because of a scheduled American Legion baseball doubleheader that night against Grand Forks, but Mike Mongoven of the sponsoring Thief River Falls park and recreation department, says there is plenty of open space available around the arena, and the clinic personnel can select their exact site, which will be posted at the arena door. In case of rain the clinic will be held inside the sports arena.

After visiting Thief River Falls, Giuliani, Gostick and Casey will be at Crookston Saturday at 9 a.m. to complete their northwestern Minnesota swing. Rest of their summer schedule includes stops July 22-23 at Hayward and Ashland, Wis. and trips July 29-30 at Hamburg and New Ulm in southern Minnesota.

Earlier this summer the clinics were performed in Iowa at Ames, Urbandale, Osage and New Hampton; in Wisconsin at Prescott; and in Minnesota at Eden Prairie, St. Cloud, Hastings, Cambridge, Litchfield, Arlington, Hampton, Red Wing, North St. Paul, Forest Lake, Alexandria, Wadena and Minneapolis at the Metrodome.

Giuliani, a former big league catcher with the Brooklyn Dodgers, St. Louis Browns and Washington Senators, invites clinic participants to bring their gloves to Friday's program.

— Men's Slow Pitch —

Division I leader American Legion-Miller Beer-TG Sporting Goods and Division II leader Berkner Agency-Best Western Inn were both winners in Monday and Tuesday's Thief River Falls men's slow pitch softball association, but Division III leader Wennberg's Welding lost.

American Legion-Miller Beer-TG Sporting Goods swept Pepsi Bottling Co. 4-1 and the St. Hilaire Bears 9-0 in a split Tuesday doubleheader, setting the stage for a Thursday night confrontation with E.T.'s Bees. Once-beaten American Legion-Miller Beer-TG Sporting Goods and twice-beaten E.T.'s Bees have split two earlier decisions.

Berkner Agency-Best Western Inn edged Nichol's Beauty Nook-Paint & Glass Supply 11-10 Monday and opened up a three-game lead in the loss column when Division II challengers Stone's Mobile Radio and Farmer's Co-op Elevator both lost Monday games. Stone's Mobile Radio surrendered ten runs in the seventh inning in a 10-4 loss to Bakke Insurance-TRF Office Products, while Farmer's Co-op Elevator fell to American Family Insurance Co-op Oil 8-6. Bakke Insurance-TRF Office Products, after the seventh inning rally against Stone's Mobile Radio, reversed roles in the second half of a split Monday twinbill by giving up seven sixth inning runs in an 8-4 loss to First Federal Savings & Loan Association.

In a Tuesday match-up of the top two teams in Division II, second place Sound Level-Hardees knocked off first place Wennberg's Welding 12-5, cutting the gap in the standings to one game in the loss column.

Health Hustlers also won twice, blanking Hutchinson Transfer 5-0 and doubling American Legion 12-6 behind Julie Bergsnev's home run and two triples and a strong defense that produced three double plays.

Elsewhere, Dwight's Hartz-St. Hilaire shut out Hutchinson Transfer 14-0 and American Legion handled KSNR 11-1 as Peggy Mehrkens tripled.

Football Prep Bowl Format Announced

Minnesota State High School League will conduct the second annual Prep Bowl at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome on Saturday, November 19, and announces that marching bands from Rosemount, Spring Lake Park, Winona, Anoka and Rocori high schools have been selected to perform for pre-game and halftime programs of the state's five high school football championship games.

Bands from those high schools were selected from among those whose reputation for providing colorful and exciting halftime programs is well known throughout Minnesota.

Prep Bowl I

Prep Bowl I is history now and what history it made as more than 3,000 high school musicians performed for pre-game and halftime programs throughout the day.

Prep Bowl I was a smashing success in every respect and sports fans, musicians, and followers of high school activities in Minnesota are anxiously looking forward to November 19 and the second annual Prep Bowl I. Prep Bowl I attracted 42,610 spectators.

1983 Prep Bowl

This year's 1983 version of Prep Bowl will feature Minnesota's 10 championship game teams who will compete in five classifications. In addition, the musical pomp and ceremony of the day will begin at 10 a.m. as the Rosemount high school marching band provides the pre-game program prior to the start of the first game of the day, the Class B championship. This 170-member aggregation is led by band director Art Smith.

At halftime of the day's opening game, the Spring Lake Park high school marching band, under the direction of William Webb, will provide the halftime entertainment. Class C competition will be reflected in two fine football teams as well as the outstanding Winona high school marching band. This award winning band is conducted by Mickey Lockner.

Third game of the day will feature Minnesota's Nine-Man champions on the gridiron. At halftime the Rocori high school marching band from Cold Spring, directed by Bob Harris, features over 150 members and includes one of the finest color guards-flag units in the state.

Class A football title game, in addition to featuring some of the finest football in the state, will feature at halftime the Anoka high school marching band. Under the direction of Zala Faschant, this organization will thrill football fans who journey to the Metrodome.

Final game of the 1983 Prep Bowl, featuring two teams from the state's larger enrollment high schools, will be for the Class AA championship and will be highlighted by pomp and football pageantry not seen before at the Metrodome.

Massed Band

Dr. Earl Benson, Bloomington, coordinator for Prep Bowl Music activities, will once again conduct the Prep Bowl massed band. This year Benson has put together musical ideas which will most certainly bring Prep Bowl viewers to their feet.

Finale portion of the second annual Prep Bowl will feature the five select bands in a pre-game salute to our flag and country. Complete with the pledge of allegiance and our National Anthem, this will be a musical presentation sure to stir the heart of Minnesotans in attendance and those watching on television.

This year 1,400 plus high school musicians will fill the gridiron from goal post to goal post as they present a halftime program unlike any other seen in this area.

Following an introductory fanfare and announcements from Rod Person, the musical master of ceremonies for Prep Bowl, the combined bands will march down the field to the music of Irving Berlin. . . and what better way than to say it with music.

Feature number on the halftime program will be music from the pen of Leroy Anderson. The massed band will accompany over 100 trumpet players from the select bands as they perform "Bugler's Holiday" and "Trumpeter's Lullabye."

Minnesota schools will be highlighted in photographs from musical activities throughout the state as the massed band performs a musical selection entitled, "Evergreen." Popular to students and adults, this number will background pictures of Minnesota students "in action" in the state's activities program. Fans at the Metrodome will view this presentation on the scoreboard, while home television viewers will have an opportunity to view the program as well.

Concert number of the halftime program will be an excerpt from Modeste Mousorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." The "final picture" — The Great Gate of Kiev — will be performed by the massed band, complete with 10 sets of chimes on the field, and recording bells from the stadium's sound system.

Finale for the halftime of Prep Bowl has been chosen carefully, according to Benson, to highlight the importance of this Minnesota event, and the significance of bringing together Minnesotans through music and athletics to prep bowl activities. This year's Prep Bowl finale will highlight "Peace on Earth" through the words of Americans, and conclude with the favorite of all Americans, "America the Beautiful."

On the field over 1,600 student musicians, providing an American tribute as the 30-yard American flag and over 100 additional American flags unfurl to the strains of America's favorite songs . . . indeed, the second annual Prep Bowl will be better than ever, promise sponsors.

Fishing Contest Names Winners Of Top Prizes

Winners in the $100,000 Minnesota Walleye Cup '83 held their awards ceremony on Monday, June 27, at the office complex of Upper Midwest Sports, sponsors of the tourney.

Walleye Cup was held opening weekend, May 14-15, on all statewide fishing waters. There were 1,381 entrants, far below the sponsor's expectations. However, all prizes were paid as they advertised.

Delay in announcing the 170 winners was due to the necessity of verifying all fish entered in the tournament. This was accomplished through legal affidavits, fish inspection including x-rays, polygraph tests, and checking the scales the fish had been weighed on.

Champions of the three categories were: Darell Randolph, Rosemount, 11-pound, 8-ounce walleye - $25,000 winner; Dan Donofrio, Mounds View, 19-pound, 4-ounce northern - $10,000 winner; and Dwayne Terwey, Duluth, 2-pound crappie - $2,500 winner.

Other winners received boats, motors, trolling motors, fishing trips to Alaska, depth finders and reels.

Winners in each category caught fish as small as a 4-pound, 12-ounce walleye, a 2-pound, 2-ounce northern and a 5-ounce crappie.

Sponsors are encouraged by the public's response to this unique concept of a statewide tournament and have already begun plans for next year. They anticipate making some changes in the format based upon their experience this year, but do promise that there will be a Minnesota Walleye Cup '84 on opening weekend next year that will be bigger and more exciting.

Effie Rodeo Set Two Days, July 30 and 31

North Star Stampede at Effie will be held July 30 and 31. This will be the 28th event and although promoter Howard Pitzen contends it will be hard to put on a better rodeo than last year's, "We are sure going to try to do just that.

"I feel that the rough string that we have now is as good or better than it has ever been. We have been buying and culling stock for years and, of course, we are always in the market for good new stock," Pitzen said. At the Korkow Rodeo company dispersal sale at Fort Pierre, SD last fall the Pitzens bought several head of bucking horses and one bull named "Bad River". There are approximately 50 broncs and 46 bulls to draw from for the cowboys who pay for the privilege of attempting an eight-second ride on the backs of these special animals.

Rodeo contestants are again expected from a several state area and local area cowboys will also be well represented. Larry Kaczor of Grand Rapids will be entered in the saddle bronc and bareback riding. He won the bareback riding in 1979 and won both the saddle bronc and the bareback last year. Last year's bull riding winner, Fred Pitzen, will be entered in all three rough stock events to see if he can keep one of the silver trophy buckles in the Bigfork valley.

Cimarron Pitzen will be entered in the steer wrestling. He placed second last year and has placed in the money several times in years past but has failed to win the silver buckle. He won the steer wrestling at the Pine City stampede last fall.

A special feature this year will be Charlie Renollet of Grand Rapids with his trick horse "Cocoa". Charlie and Cocoa have appeared at shows and rodeos throughout the United States and performed at Effie a number of years ago. Charlie is about to retire from show business and would like to work the North Star stampede one more time.

The action will get underway at the North Star ranch, two miles north of Effie, on July 30 and 31 at 2 p.m. each day. The camping and parking is free but campers are urged to bring their own drinking water as there is no deep well on the rodeo grounds.

WARROAD CATCHER Kevin Olson tried to put the tag on Thief River Falls runner Al Ness on a play at the plate in the third inning of Tuesday's American Legion baseball game played here. Ness was safe on the play, scoring from second base on a throwing error by Warroad third baseman Roger Lien. Umpire Tom Goddard and on-deck batter Tim Nyland kept on eye on things. Thief River Falls won 13-3.

National Wildlife Federation News Release

True of False: Bats are vicious, filthy and disease-ridden mammals that attack humans. False.

In fact, bats — the only flying mammals — are gentle, intelligent and frequently beneficial animals, according to this month's International Wildlife, the bimonthly publication of the National Wildlife Federation.

Sensational stores often portray bats as aggressive flying monsters that charge at people and transmit deadly diseases. Bats are actually meticulously clean and seldom spread disease or parasites to humans.

Despite exaggerated claims, fewer than one half of one per cent of bats ever contract rabies, according to International Wildlife, and only 10 people in the United States and Canada have died of disease from bats in more than 30 years — far less than the number of people killed by dog attacks.

Bats are also gentle and sociable when it comes to rearing their offspring. Most expectant bat mothers join nursery colonies where hundreds of even millions of them congregate to raise their young. While mothers help each other with child-rearing chores, each individual recognizes and protects her own offspring. Fathers, in the meantime, cooperate by simple leaving the colony, reducing competition for limited food at the site. Among bat species that live in small groups, however, males may help with rearing the young, and bring food home to their mates.

Home for bats is usually a cave, though many also roost in animal burrows, termite and bird nests, unfurling banana leaves, bamboo stalks, or even spider webs. Several make their own homes by cutting palm fronds or other leaves to make "tents."

Most bats migrate in the spring and fall to find suitable hibernating caves or warmer climates, often traveling up to a thousand miles one way. When researchers have deliberately moved bats hundreds of miles, they've discovered that bats find their way home.

Guiding bats through the air is a complex navigational system with sonar more sophisticated than man can comprehend, according to International Wildlife. What we do know is that bats produce rapid pulses of sound at rates ranging from 20 to more than 500 per second, using sonar to perceive motion, distance, speed, trajectory, shape, texture and size — enabling them to detect and avoid obstacles as thin as a human hair or as small as a mosquito.

Because of their intricate sonar, bats are exceptionally long-lived and disease-resistance, making them extremely valuable in scientific research. Studies on bats, for example, have contributed to development of navigational aids for the blind, new vaccines, artificial insemination and birth control methods, drug testing and studies of aging and space biology.

Bats are also major pollinators of 130 varieties of tropical plants, and the fruit-eating species are nature's most important seed-dispersing animals. Included on the long list of fruits, nuts and derivatives from bat-adapted plants are peaches, bananas, avocados, cashews, mangoes and figs.

Despite their obvious value, bats are relentlessly persecuted, and many of their populations are extremely low, according to International Wildlife. Scare stories about bats frighten people into attempting dangerous solutions to minor or nonexistent problems. When people fear bats in their homes, for instance, they may needlessly spray with toxic pesticides — threatening both humans and bats. Acting out of fear, people also close cave entrances — eliminating suitable habitat for as many as a million bats in one cave. Human distrubance can frighten young bat mothers who then allow their young to die.

Washington Report

Sen. Dave Durenberger

Minnesotans Tour Washington

Summers in our nation's Capitol are famous for tourism. By bus, car, train or plane, thousands of people arrive in this city every day.

You'd be surprised how many of these folks are from Minnesota. Recently, I had the opportunity to meet the Land O' Lakes Boys choir on the steps of the Capitol. They sang a medley of patriotic songs entertaining Senator Boschwitz, me, and a few of the passers-by.

I also has the opportunity to meet the Rural Electrification Association's Youth Tour group — I saw young people from all over our great state. If you're planning to visit Washington, D.C. this summer, make sure you stop by my office. We have maps, brochures, a few tips and some homesick Minnesotans who would love to say hello.

The full Finance Committee recently held two days of hearings on the Economic Equity Act (EEA) of 1983. I introduced this bill with two Senate colleagues — Bob Packwood and Mark Hatfield of Oregon.

This bill was years in the making. It is designed to legislatively eliminate economic discrimination against women in areas such as pensions, insurance, tax policy, child support enforcement, government regulations and many other areas.

This bill was first introduced two years ago in the 97th Congress. And look what happened! The major estate tax reform that Congress passed in 1981 came from the EEA. This reform recognized the role of women in building family farms and businesses.

The EEA eliminated discrimination in Federal Farm Credit, expanded Individual Retirement Accounts to make homemakers eligible for these retirement nest eggs, and increased dependent day care tax credits.

This year we're hoping to pass the entire bill and we're off to a good start. The Finance Committee hearings were the first time a Senate Committee has considered such a comprehensive package to eliminate discrimination against homemakers and women who work outside the home.

This summer Durenberger volunteers will distribute questionnaires at County Fairs around the state. I want to find out where you stand on some important issues that are coming before Congress. These are important issues. They will affect the economic well-being of this country for the next several years, as well as have an affect on you and your family.

Please pick up one of these questionnaires at your fair, and take a few moments to let me know what you think about defense spending, tax increases, tax indexing and government support of farm commodities, along with other issues.

In Memoriam
In loving memory of our dear husband and father, Ralph Wold, who was killed on July 12, 1982:

Never a day goes by
When we don't think of you,
Remembering your love and kindness -
So much a part of you.
Remembering, too, your gentle smile,
The ways you brought us joy;
We feel so lost and empty now,
Still asking, wondering why.
We miss your words of comfort
Surrounding us with care;
We miss the way you'd make us laugh -
You had so much to share.
The memory of your tenderness
Has helped to keep you near;
You brightened up our lives with love -
You were so very dear.
And though we do not understand,
We trust you in God's care,
Knowing in our hearts, some day,
We'll meet you over There.

Very sadly missed by his wife, Betty, and children, Sheila, Renae, David and Denise.
This poem was written by one of the Wold's daughters. 1t56p

Harness Racing Returns To County Fair

Harness racing will be back at the Pennington county fair after many years of absence when a race program will be presented Wednesday beginning at 6:30 p.m. Fairgrounds race track is being groomed for the event and mosquito control, which has been underway for several days, should add to the enjoyment of watching the races from the grandstand.

Approximately 15 horses are expected for the races which will be conducted under sanction of the Minnesota Harness Racing association. The association will also furnish a professional announcer and official starter. According to Ev Ault, local chairman of the racing committee for the Pennington county fair, there will be three races during the evening program with two timed heats per race. A $500 purse will be offered for each race.

Several racers are expected from the Hamilton and Bathgate area of North Dakota with most of the horses and drivers coming out of central and southern Minnesota. Among the veteran drivers will be Milford Olson who has raced harness horses for 32 years.

Pictured above, Kay Lynn Kainz of the Mavie 4-H club turned to allow the judges to see all sides of her dress during intermediate level competition. Due to Thursday's hot weather, various events of the 4-H fashion revue were scattered among meeting rooms at the city auditorium, Pennington county courthouse and the law enforcement center, in an attempt to make use of available air conditioning.

SOCIETY and CLUBS

Tammy Kron - Jim Panek Vows Spoken At Viking

Tammy Irene Kron and Jim Lee Panek exchanged marriage vows on Saturday, July 2, at 4:00 p.m., at the Covenant church in Viking.

The bride is the daughter of Martha Kron of Thief River Falls and Larry Kron, Newfolden. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Panek of Goodridge.

Rev. Dale Van Deusen officiated at the double ring ceremony before an altar flaked by candelabra. At the organ was Annie Hanson, a friend of the couple. She played the traditional wedding march as the bride was escorted to the altar and given in marriage by her parents. Vocalists were Nancy Hanson, a friend, and Terry Dunham, a cousin of the bride. Selections sung were "We've Only Just Begun," "Ice Castles," "Savior Like a Shepherd Lead Us," and "Wedding Song."

The bride was attired in a floor-length gown styled with a fitted lace bodice featuring sheer sleeves gathered into wide lace cuffs, buttoned at the wrists. Scalloped lace outlined the Queen Anne neckline. Her floor-length skirt, with a front lace panel, was complemented by a chapel-length train. A profile headpiece, embroidered with iridescents, held her double-tiered veil of bridal illusion. She carried a cascade of miniature carnations, tipped in blue, white Shasta daisies and babies' breath with blue ribbon streamers.

Kristie Olson, Newfolden, a friend of the couple, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Kathy Panek, Goodridge, sister of the groom; Colleen Kron, Newfolden, and Teresa Kron, Thief River Falls, sisters of the bride. They wore light blue floor-length gowns with long sheer sleeves and a sheer V-yoke featuring a stand-up lace collar. To complete their attire, they wore light blue wide-brimmed hats and carried two long-stemmed white carnations, tipped in blue, ferns and blue ribbon streamers.

Wearing a white floor-length lace dress in capelet style, was the flowergirl, Amy Dunham, a cousin of the bride. She carried a white basket filled with blue tipped carnations and white daisies with blue streamers.

The rings were carried by Nicklous Rappe, Winger, a cousin of the bride. He wore white trousers with a blue and white seersucker jacket with matching bow tie. He carried the rings on a heart-shaped pillow edged with lace.

Jeff Panek, Goodridge, attended his brother as best man. Groomsmen were Billy Kron, Newfolden, brother of the bride; Tim Skime, Roseau, a friend of the couple, and Scott Panek, Goodridge, a brother of the groom. The ushers were Bruce Johnson and Bruce Swanson, friends of the couple. All wore silver jackets with gray trim, gray trousers, light blue pleated shirts with wing collars, and silver bow ties. Their boutonnieres were single carnations tipped in blue. The groom wore all silver attire accented with a blue shirt and a boutonniere composed of white minature carnations and babies' breath.

The mother of the bride was attired in a light blue floor-length gown tipped by a matching lace vest. The groom's mother wore a light green floor-length gown. Both were white accessories and white daisy corsages tied with mauve ribbon.

Honor guests were: Mr. and Mrs. H.R. McGlothlin, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kron, Francis Panek, Ida Ranstrom and Ronnie Skime. Rhonda Skjerping was the bride's personal attendant.

At the wedding reception that followed, host and hostess were Hilding and Ella Arnell, cousins of the bride. Betty Harder, aunt of the groom, was at the guest book, and Penny Mills and Jill Odberg, cousins of the bride, ladled the punch.

Centering the serving table was a three-tiered wedding cake with a flowing blue-water fountain at the base. Grecian pillars with cherubs supported the cake which was decorated with wedding bells and blue and white daisies. A miniature bride and groom, topped the upper tier, also supported by cherubs. The cake was cut and served by Dorothy Wold, aunt of the bride, and Marge Bacon, a cousin of the bride. Barb Mills and Karen Odberg, cousins of the bride, poured the coffee.

Waiting tables were Debbie and Rosy Sieberg and Loren and Larry Siebert, cousins of the groom. Jenni Garr and Christy Anenson, friends of the couple, arranged the gifts.

Friends and relatives attending were from Colorado, Montana, New Mexico, California, Washington, N.D., and parts of Minnesota.

A wedding supper was served at Florence's Cafe for the wedding party and members of the families. Hosting the supper was the grandfather, H.R. McGlothlin.

For her going away attire, the bride wore a mauve colored dress. Following a camping trip, the couple is at home in this city at 421 North Horace. The bride is a 1983 graduate of Lincoln high school and is enrolled at the Thief River Falls area vocational technical institute, school of cosmetology. The groom, a 1982 graduate of Lincoln, is attending Northland Community college, and is employed by Lon's Resturant and Pub. Photo, James Solsten, Thief River Falls.

Quilt Industry Expects To Be Operating Soon

FIRST PAYMENT of a $59,000 grant from the governor's council on rural development (GCRD) was recently received by Project Heritage Design, a new cottage industry which intends to design and market quilts which will be sewn by rural women in Region I. Harry Sjuulson, St. Hilaire, who served on the GCRD's small business committee and is currently co-chairman of the value-added task force, presented the check. Accepting the funds on behalf of the project were general manager Milly Dallmann, center, and product design manager Mary Follett, who were recently selected by the board of directors of the company.

Project Heritage Design, a new cottage industry which plans to design and market quilts sewn by rural women in Kittson, Marshall, Norman, Pennington, Polk, Red Lake and Roseau counties, has taken steps recently which should bring the concept closer to reality.

Steps included the filling of two part-time staff positions, with the hiring of Mary Follett as project design manager and Milly Dallmann as general manager on July 11. Their selection was made by the local board of directors, which includes President Deborah Matero, Vice President Betty Walton, Recorder Arlyne Forsberg, Treasurer Joanie Wilson, and directors Linda Bentson, Gloria Bjorkmann, Kathryn Dryden, Glenda Gausen, Diana Josephson, Dee Kreuter, Betty Liden, Ruth Nepper, Margaret Saetre, Carletta Tierney, Gail Ueland and Linda Wallerich.

This non-profit business venture is being started with the assistance of a $59,000 grant from the governor's council on rural development (GCRD). First payment of 40 per cent of the grant was recently received, with presentation of the check made by Harry Sjulson, St. Hilaire, who served on the GCRD's small business committee, which initially reviewed the grant proposal presented by Betty Walton, Thief River Falls. Project Heritage Design was one of nine projects funded by GCRD in May.

Matero noted that much local assistance was instrumental in obtaining the grant. In addition to efforts of the board members and Intercounty community council, Oklee, which served as the sponsoring agency for Project Heritage Design, she credited Thief River Falls City Planner Jack Quinlivan for providing employment statistics, and numerous other people for expressing support in letters to the GCRD.

Those submitting letters with the grant proposal included Mayor Bob Carlson; Chamber of Commerce President Stan Upham; Everett Ault, president, Jobs Inc.; Jon Larson, chairman, Thief River Falls planning commission; Terry Lemer, adult director, Thief River Falls area vocational technical institute; Alex Easton, president, Northland community college; Senators Roger D. Moe and LeRoy Stumpf; State Representatives Wally Sparby and Willis R. Ekin; J.R. Bolen, director of market consulting, Directional Marketing Associates; Roger Wittenberg, district job training manager, Minnesota department of economic security; Terrence Gere, former senior vice president, Norwest Bank; and Paul Anderson, state director of Minnesota Green Thumb.

Headquarters for Project Heritage Design have temporarily been established at 216 North Main Avenue, Thief River Falls. Applications for quilters will be taken in July and August, and production of quilts is expected to begin this fall.

Asp Family To Be Guests At Aquatennial

Rose Asp, widow of the builder of the Viking replica ship "Hjemkomst", and her seven children are honorary guests of the 1983 Minneapolis Aquatennial torchlight parade set Wednesday.

She and her children will ride second in the nearly two hour long parade behind parade Grand Marshall John Glenn, America's first man to conquer outer space. They will ride in a $123,000 Dusenberg Royalton automobile.

"Dare to Dream," theme of the drive to raise money to build a home for the Hjemkomst, has been selected as the theme for a Wednesday evening mayor's banquet at which Rose and family will be guests of honor. A special film will be shown at the banquet presenting the first space shot and the voyage of the Hjemkomst, based upon the Dare to Dream theme.

July 20, one day following the one year anniversary of the arrival of the Viking replica ship in Bergan, Norway, has been declared "Hjemkomst day" in Minnesota by Governor Perpich.

"We are very pleased and excited to have this honor given to our family," Rose Asp exclaimed. "It is especially exciting because of the amount of publicity we will be getting for the effort the Red River Valley Heritage society is making to build a home for the Hjemkomst in Moorhead."

Four of the Asp children, Debbie, Tom, Doug and Roger helped crew the Hjemkomst on its voyage. The other three children, Vicki, Greg, and Marg were instrumental in helping their father build the ship.

The Hjemkomst is presently awaiting shipping at a freight dock in Oslo, Norway. While a firm date has not been set for departure, it is expected that the ship will return to Minnesota some time in August. The RRVHS anticipates exhibiting the ship at the Western Minnesota Steam Threshers Reunion at Rollag, MN, over the Labor Day weekend.

Open Show For Dairy Goats At County Fair

Dairy goats and the folks who raise and care for them will have their day at the Pennington county fair this year. Open class competition for dairy goats will be conducted on Friday — the first time such a class has been offered at the fair here.

Dairy goat owners from surrounding communities are expected to bring some of their top animals to the fair for judging. The open class showing is the result of a high interest developing in dairy goats and the increasing number of people owning them.

An average dairy goat will produce anywhere from 42 to 84 pounds of milk a week and need only about a sixth of the forage and grain required of a dairy cow, according to a local dairy goat fancier. Because they weigh only about 100 pounds, they are easy to handle and can be kept in smaller enclosures than cattle.

The goats are reportedly fastidious, browse only on the tops of most plants, but will eat weeds and other browse which cattle disdain. They also seem to be extremely personable and enjoy human companionship. Public is invited to watch the judging Friday afternoon in the livestock barn area of the fairgrounds.

State Third In Production Of Mink Pelts

Minnesota was the third leading state in total mink pelt production in 1982 behind Wisconsin and Utah. Total state production amounted to 542,300 mink pelts. The remaining color classes accounted for 18.4 per cent.

Total United States production was 4.06 million pelts. Wisconsin, with 1.16 million pelts, accounted for 28 per cent of the nation's total.

By color class, the number of pelts as a per cent of the total U.S. production was: standard 32.5 per cent, ranch wild, 10.1 per cent; demi-buff, 18 per cent; pastel, 15.9 per cent; pearl, 6.8 per cent; and violet, 4.9 per cent. The remaining color classes accounted for 11.8 per cent.

Total U.S. value of mink pelts sold during the 1982 crop year was 119.9 million dollars. The average price per pelt for the 1982 crop year was $29.40, compared with an average price of $32.20 in 1981 and $35.30 in 1980.

Minnesota was also third in the nation in the total number of females bred to produce kits in 1983. Of the 143,600 females bred, standard color class claimed 31.9 per cent, ranch wild 22.4 per cent, pastel 13.2 per cent and demi-buff 8.1 per cent. The remaining color classes accounted for 24.4 per cent.

The number of mink females in the U.S. bred to produce kits in 1983 totaled 1.13 million. Females bred in the leading states are: Wisconsin, 313, and Utah, 167.

Per cent of total females bred to produce kits in 1983 by color class are: Standard, 33.9 per cent; ranch wild, 8.9 per cent; demi-buff, 15.4 per cent; pastel, 11.1 per cent; pearl, 7.9 per cent; and violet, 6.7 per cent. The remaining color classes accounted for 14.1 per cent.

In 1982 there were 144 mink farms in Minnesota. In the U.S., there were 1,154 mink farms producing pelts in 1982. Leading states were Wisconsin with 262 farms and Utah with 175 farms, followed by Minnesota.

GREASE 2

REFLECTI NS

A wise man does not grieve for the things he has not, he rejoices for those which he has. We oft times forget just how fortunate we are—take many of our blessings and gifts for granted. The gift of sight and sense of sound—the blessing of being loved. Take care to give thanks daily for that which we have and waste no time grieving for that which we have not. That is the course of a truly wise person.

Peder Engelstad's Dairy Featured Top Guernseys

by Melvin Engelstad

Purebred Guernsey Sires Pay Off

Peder's purebred Guernsey bull, Ashton, was exhibited at the Pennington County Fair in 1908, as he had been at the county's first two fairs in 1906 and 1907, and, much to the pleasure of the family, he had been awarded the blue ribbon each year. Ashton was sold this same year to a dairy farmer at Bronson, Minnesota, and at the recommendation of A.J. McGuire, Superintendent of the Agricultural School at Grand Rapids, Minnesota, Peder purchased Marquis of Trianon, his next sire, from Svein Rydberg of that city.

When the animal was unloaded at the Great Northern depot in Thief River Falls, it was discovered that the lower joint of one of his hind legs had been injured in transit. Although a permanent limp resulted from the injury, this did not diminish his breeding ability.

Farmers Mutual Telephone Company

After having been organized and very active for more than a year, the Farmers Mutual Telephone Company held its first annual meeting on January 6, 1909. Peder was elected trustee, to be followed, four years later, to the post of treasurer, the capacity in which he continued to serve the company throughout the rest of his lifetime, almost 29½ years.

Thief River Cooperative Store and Thief River Building Corporation

The Right Relationship League of Minneapolis had been active establishing cooperative stores throughout Minnesota on the Rochdale Plan, which had originated in England. Representatives of the League visited Thief River Falls in 1910 and purchased the Golden Rule Store, located on the southeast corner of Main and Third Street, from Ole Schej to become the local outlet for their cooperative enterprise. Farmers and businessmen bought $25,000 worth of capital stock at $100 per share, and the organization was officially named the Thief River Cooperative Store.

Peder owned five shares. The store functioned well so long as it had the patronage of its stockholders, but its existence was jeopardized when other stores lowered prices to meet competition and drew some of the customers away. The store moved to new quarters on East Third Street, one door east of the Oen Mercantile Company, where Louise (Peder's daughter) was employed as a saleslady during 1913 and 1914.

The building was owned by the Thief River Building corporation, the stockholders of which were C.L. Hansen, T.P. Curtis, and Peder; construction of the building had been financed by funds provided by the three stockholders and by a loan from the First National Bank.

The Cooperative Store's financial condition continued to weaken, however, and Peder, as an accommodation, bought three shares of stock from Peder Becken at $40 a share; then, at another time, he withdrew $1,100 from his account at the First National Bank so that L. Jensen, the store manager, could pay a bill that was due. When it was decided to discontinue the cooperative venture (1916), the owners of the building bought out the rest of the store's stockholders.

The Thief River Building Corporation continued to rent out space in the building, and the money collected from tenants was sufficient to cover taxes and insurance that totaled about $1,000 a year. The insurance on the building was inadequate, however, as was sorely realized three years later (1919) when the building was destroyed by fire. Taxes on the lot following the fire were $400 a year, which the corporation continued to pay while being undecided about rebuilding during those years.

The tax rate was reduced (1933), and former Sheriff Ole Ihle, now in the real estate business, came out to Peder's farm stating that the lot could be sold to a Minneapolis brewery firm for $1,000. The deal was consummated, $600 going to the county for taxes, and $100 each to the stockholders and Mr. Ihle for his commission. Peder estimated his loss on the Cooperative Store project at $4,000.

Daily Deliver of Same Day's Milk and Cream to Customers in Thief River

Cream, skimmed from the top of the cold milk, and butter, churned on the farm, had been sold to customers for many years, as had whole milk, which was taken in large quantities by restaurants — the Soo Cafe being an example of the latter, taking eight gallons each day. Some of the home customers receiving two regular deliveries of milk and cream a week, as early as 1900, were Dr. Henry Grundy, Karl Kretzschmar, J.L. Dobner and Peric Mabey.

Peder was soon aware that the best income could be realized from the sale of whole milk and cream directly into the homes of consumers, with the remaining cream being delivered to the creamery and skim milk being utilized on the farm.

Frank Knox was a realtor and prominent citizen of Thief River Falls whose name had been given, in commemoration, to one of the city's elementary schools. During the winter of 1912-13, Mr. Knox delivered bottled milk to customers from his farm north of the city, and to supplement his milk supply, he made arrangements to purchase additional milk from Peder's herd, the bottling of which was done on the long work counter in Mathilde's kitchen. Mr. Knox met with financial reverses in 1913, and Peder attended the creditors' sale, where he purchased such equipment as the bottles, crates and milk cooler.

With many of Mr. Knox's former customers now turning to Peder for service, this year really marked the expanded format on which his daily milk delivery business operated and flourished for many years. There was little competition and, consequently, no advertising, except the word passed on by satisfied customers. The first bottling was done in Mathilde's kitchen, but as soon as the weather permitted, it was moved outside to a shed built for the purpose and located south of the old milk house.

This daily, house-to-house milk delivery service was operated without interruption for more than 29 years. The nation was in the grip of World War II economic restrictions, and, an announcement — to the effect that truck tires for house-to-house delivery would not be available after November 15 — led to the decision to discontinue the milk route on September 30, 1942.

TRF Times on 1-16-1914 Carried an Article on The Feeding and Production Record of 40 of Peder's Cows

An informative article on the feeding and production record of 40 of Peder's cows appeared in the January 16, 1914, issue of the Thief River Falls Times. It occupied two full columns on the front page, plus half of an inside page, and it revealed to the public Peder's analytical, businesslike approach to any occupation, in this instance, dairy farming. He pointed out that the farmers were the backbone of business in Pennington and surrounding counties and reinforced his statements with figures showing the earned profit for each of 40 selected cows.

The story was written as a challenge to local bankers and businessmen "to extend something, besides sympathy, to show their interest in the welfare of the farmers." From the eleven columns of statistical information, four were selected for six cows to indicate the importance of Peder's record-keeping in identifying his cows as distinct assets or liabilities.

Name of cow, days of milk production, pounds of milk and pounds of butterfat along with net profit over cost of feed for six cows was as follows: Pauline, 345 days, 9,150 and 403.6 pounds, $101.36; Brindle, 306 days, 7,005 and 317.0 pounds, $74.90; Dolly, 305 days, 7,338 and 304.5 pounds, $70.96; Primrose, 242 days, 5,953 and 235.4 pounds, $59.49; Queen, 365 days, 6,092 and 262.6 pounds, $58.17; and Oleana, 308 days, 5,410 and 254.5 pounds, $57.86.

This same year (1914), the Great Northern Railway Company was searching for a suitable picture for the front cover of a booklet to be distributed from every railroad station in its system throughout the United States and Canada. Peder was honored by the company's selection of two pictures taken on his farm — one showing his herd of cows near the barn, the other showing Peder in a field of tall alfalfa.

Large blown-up reproductions of the cover were placed on view in all Great Northern stations calling attention to the booklets and identifying Peder and the locale of his farm. His brother Hans, who had been a resident of the state of Washington for several years, was greatly surprised one day when he walked into the station at Everett and saw these pictures of Peder and his Minnesota dairy farm prominently displayed on the counter.

Peder's Philosophy of Dairying Described in Magazine "The Farmer," 3-13-1915

Peder's dairy experiences were described interestingly in "The Farmer" of March 13, 1915. These sentences, extracted from the article, reveal a great deal about his philosophy of dairying:

"Conditions must be such that the cow keeps the farmer instead of the farmer keeping the cow. . . The kind of cow that we need most is the cow that receives attention on Sundays as well as on Mondays. . . Many a cow on many a farm is made a scrub cow by the "scrubby" way in which the farmer takes care of her."

Organization of Valhall National Farm Loan Association

The Valhall National Farm Loan Association was organized by Peder in 1916 after negotiating with the Federal Land Bank at St. Paul. A minimum of ten members was required, and upon issuance of a loan, five per cent was placed in a reserve fund, which was maintained for protection against defaulted payments. This fund reached $6,000 and constituted the capital stock of the association.

Peder was elected president for three successive years, then became secretary-treasurer, and served in this capacity for 10 years, when operation of the association was discontinued. As president, Peder had been reimbursed for time spent in attending meetings and appraising land, while in the position of secretary-treasurer, he was paid on a commission basis according to the dollar amount of negotiated loans.

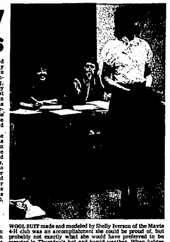
Creation of Red River Valley Guernsey Breeders Association

The Red River Valley Guernsey Breeders association was organized in northwestern Minnesota with a two-fold purpose: To offer surplus Guernsey stock of purebreds and grades for sale to the public; and, to obtain fair prices for the animals by spreading the gospel of good Guernsey cattle both as to type and breed. The first sale was held at the Albert Johnson farm in June, 1918, and satisfactory prices were realized for the stock, which was also the experience during the several succeeding years when the sales were conducted at the Thief River Falls fairgrounds.

The consignment sales, sponsored annually by the Red River Valley Guernsey Breeders Association during these years, served a useful purpose in making purebred Guernsey males and females, as well as excellent grade animals, available to farmers throughout the Valley.

According to the program for the Seventh Annual Sale on June 10, 1926, when Peder's son Paul was president of the association, there were 32 breeders consigning 102 head of dairy cattle for the sale. Peder, with 15 head, presented the greatest number of animals, followed by Albert Johnson with 10. As the surplus of Guernsey stock gradually lessened and prices dropped, there seemed no further justification for the sales, and the annual event was discontinued in 1935.

(To Be Continued)



WOOL SUIT made and modeled by Shelly Iverson of the Mavie 4-H club was an accomplishment she could be proud of, but probably not exactly what she would have preferred to be wearing in Thursday's hot and humid weather. When judges Ranelle Fogelson and Glenice Johnson asked her to remove the jacket so that they could examine the blouse she had made, Shelly readily complied. The girls were judged not only on the construction and fit of their garments, but on choice of accessories and styles appropriate to their individual body type. 4-H fashion revue judging is conducted in advance of the Pennington county fair, and determines premium winners and representatives to attend the state fair.

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor:

I recently purchased a large item at J.C. Penney's in T.R.F. I had some serious problems with this item, so I went and talked to manager Bill Duckworth, and he had the problem taken care of at his store's expense.

I would like to say thanks to Bill Duckworth and J.C. Penney's. I'm very satisfied with their response to my problem. James Teed

How About It?

Wallace E. Groberg of Oklee has been studying workmen's compensation in Minnesota in comparison with other states and finds that the disparities Minnesota Businessmen complain about are indeed true. Despite legislative claims of relief, employers in Minnesota continue to pay substantially more than those in other states. Groberg writes as follows:

Articles in the media have been telling us that the rates employers pay for workmen's compensation insurance is higher in Minnesota than surrounding states. The Minnesota legislators worked feverishly to prepare a new law that would somehow reduce the burden on Minnesota business; but nowhere did I ever see a schedule of premiums currently being paid, nor a comparison of these costs with neighboring states.

Well now, I dug out the following Minnesota rates and comparisons from the National Council on Compensation Insurance, basic manual for January 1983. They all are for manufacturing operations, complete with legal descriptions and proper insurance classification numbers, including

No.	Manufacturing	Minnesota	So. Dakota	Iowa	Wisconsin	U.S. Avg.
2501	Clothing	$ 3.72	$ .79	$ 1.04	$ 2.15	$ 1.72
3400	Metal Goods	9.02	3.00	3.71	3.59	6.29
3507	Ag Machinery	7.84	2.00	2.69	3.73	4.55
3632	Machine Shop	4.56	1.76	1.48	2.35	3.46
3146	Hardware	9.56	1.94	2.09	2.34	3.92
2883	Wood Furniture	10.00	2.56	3.09	3.76	5.19
3179	Elec. Appliances	5.40	1.15	1.45	.83	2.82
3643	Elec. Power Equip.	5.40	1.53	1.30	1.30	2.84
4279	Paper Goods	5.19	1.81	2.46	2.03	3.88
4484	Molded Plastics	6.22	2.52	2.20	2.38	4.37
	Average for above 10 manufacturing operations	$ 6.69	$ 1.91	$ 2.15	$ 2.45	$ 3.90
	Penalty for being Located in Minnesota (Comparison)		$ 4.78	$ 4.54	$ 4.24	$ 2.79

With this set of facts before us, I would like to have our elected officials, to whom we have entrusted the State Capitol in St. Paul, give us a new chart with new rates, so we can read them like they are and make comparisons we can understand.

How about it, Now?

Dubious Honors

Minnesota attorney general's office calls attention to what it terms "a class of rip-off that lies somewhere between legal promotional manipulation and outright punishable fraud." It is the use of deceptive sales gimicks which take advantage of special consumer weakness or vulnerability, not the least of which is family pride.

One popular ploy pointed out by the attorney general's office is the announcement addressed to parents of high school age children. "Congratulations," the typical letter begins, "your child has been selected based on a nationwide search using very selective creteria for the following honor."

Then follows any one of a number of seemingly prestigious awards for some skill your child may actually possess. For example, if your child is in the top third of the class scholastically, you may learn that he or she has the right (for a fee, of course) to have his or her name published with other similarly honored scholars.

Generally there will be such a publication, so the company is not making a totally false representation. On the other hand, the value of such an "award" beyond the good feeling it may give the person's family is practically nil. Likely the only people who will ever read such a publication are those whose names are in it, and then only to find where they are listed.

There are other ways dollars are made by flattering parents' egos. Another gimmick is the inclusion of one's child in a special group. A current scheme along this line is a choir tour of Europe. Parents are notified that their child's talent has gotten him or her into a special choir which will tour a number of European cities. While they are assured the invitation is an honor, parents find on closer reading that they will have to foot the bill not only for their child but will have to pick up a portion of the organizer's costs. Parents receiving such a pitch should check with local authorities and with local music teachers to learn if they have ever heard of such a group, and just what kind of an "honor" it is.

And parents should look again at the cost. What they may be buying is an expensive European trip for their child. They should ask themselves, would they otherwise send their sixteen-year-old to Europe? And even if they would, is this the preferred way?

Another gimmick is the "beauty contest." Parents are notified that their daughter has "won" the right to travel some place — say to Louisiana — for a beauty contest. With the number of legitimate beauty contests around, it is easy for them to be duped. Parents should look carefully at just what has been "won." Will they be expected to foot the bill for their daughter's travel and living expenses? What kind of accommodations have been provided? What will it take for the child to win the prize — indeed, will there be a prize? Or is this only a preliminary for later contests?

It is important to remember that most genuine honors received by children are not likely to be unexpected. Nor should they cost either parent or child money. One's best defense against being deceived is to check with those people who should know about legitimate student honors. Then follow their advice.

Establishing Irreligion

It may seem a little out of time to be talking about Christmas in the middle of the summer, but the topic comes up because of Pawtucket, RI. That city has asked the U.S. supreme court to settle the question which arises every Christmas season: May a city display the nativity scene without violating the Constitution's ban on mixing government and religion.

The chief judicial body in the nation will consider a federal appeals court ruling in Rhode Island that the creche in Pawtucket discriminated between Christian and non-Christian religions.

A U.S. justice department brief contends that "the country's history does not require stripping all religious tradition from holiday celebrations." Solicitor General Rex Lee defends the city of Pawtucket's position by stating, "We are a religious people whose institutions pre-suppose a supreme being." He cites the national motto of "In God We Trust" and George Washington's declaration of Thanksgiving as a day of prayer to acknowledge "the many and signal favors of almighty God".

"The federal government has from the earliest days of the republic to the present felt free to acknowledge and recognize that religion is a part of our heritage and should be an element in our public life and public occasion," Lee suggests. "To rule against nativity scenes would clearly require an elaborate effort to reshape our practices and rhetoric . . . a systematic hostility to religion — in effect, the establishment of irreligion."

It would be difficult to demonstrate any harm which might come from the display of a nativity scene. Those who choose to ignore it may freely do so. Although it is a Christian observance, the festival of Christmas is nationally accepted — particularly the giving of gifts.

We recall the comments of one Jewish merchant in New York City who said his family also observes Christmas. "Every Christmas eve," the businessman said, "we get the family together, go down to the store, gather around the cash register and sing 'What A Friend We Have in Jesus'."

If it is not discriminatory for the gift-giving aspect of Christmas (or more accurately the gift-selling aspect of Christmas) to be observed, why should it be discriminatory to observe the historical aspect? Unless, of course, the establishment of irreligion is the actual objective.

Interesting Opinions:

"Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and success of liberty."

—John F. Kennedy

CAPITOL COMMENTARY

by LeRoy Stumpf

State Senator — District 1

(Over the next few weeks I would like to outline in this column some of the key legislative issues that were addressed and resolved during the course of the 1983 legislative session. This week's column will focus on business legislation, to be followed by articles concerning workers' compensation, education and state spending.)

In addition to approving a major reform in the workers' compensation system in the state, which should immeasurably aid our business climate in Minnesota, the legislature is also being commended for the great number of business tax incentives and development initiatives approved last session.

Ultimately, the legislature agreed on a package of over $335 million in business tax and development improvements in the areas of education, energy development, job creation, tax credits and state agency reorganization, which should increase the ability of our small businesses, especially, to prosper and thrive in the state in the coming years.

Among some of the immediately beneficial changes were the $10.5 million in tax cuts designed to provide an economic boost to small businesses. Among the items in this package were: $1.6 million in small business technology credits; $300,000 in small business assistance funding; $4 million in corporate capital gains deductions; and $1 million in other business research and development efforts.

In addition, a number of other key incentives were offered to the business community. Among these: $10 million for energy loan assistance insurance; $16.9 million for an economic development fund; and $179,000 for alternative energy business development.

The economic development fund especially can be used to provide much needed assistance to eligible small businesses, including loan guarantees or insurance; direct loans; investment programs, purchase loan packages related to loans; purchase insurance contracts; and the issuance of business notes.

This state-funded, community development program would target small businesses composed of 20 or fewer full-time employees, or a business that grosses more than $1 million per year. In conjunction with the $70 million state jobs program to alleviate joblessness for some of the state's 250,000 unemployed, this program targets wage assistance to businesses that operate in areas of high unemployment.

Among some of the important property tax relief measures to pass this session was a major tax adjustment for business-commercial property that reduces this real estate tax from 40 per cent to 34 per cent of the first $50,000 of market value by 1984, which will cut this tax burden by $103 million as a result.

In general terms, the legislature has been commended by business organizations ranging from the Minnesota Association of Commerce and Industry, to the Minnesota Business Partnership to the Minnesota Retailers association, among others. I am proud to say these were seen as important solutions to our state's economic problems as the imbalanced budget situation we also addressed.

The funding of $8 million to improve the competitiveness of our own border area of the state is another good example of the legislative foresightedness this session, which I hope continues in the sessions to come.

Perhaps the most important trend to emerge from this session was the movement toward a more cooperative, "public-private partnership" effort among the many parties involved in this effort. We have worked to improve the ability of our business community to operate in this environment and I trust this mutual effort will continue.

If you have any questions or concerns regarding this or any other legislative issue, please feel free to contact me at my office at: 306 Capitol Building, St. Paul, MN 55155 or call (612) 296-8660, or call me at my home at: 465-4274, or write Rt. 1, Box 47, 56748.

U.S. Senator Rudy Boschwitz reports to Minnesota

Social Security Disability claims have always been re-evaluated to make sure payments were made only to those who continued to be disabled and the Social Security Act has always provided an appeals process to assure that claims received all due consideration. Disability benefits have been paid only as long as the beneficiary continued to meet the requirements of the law, that is, the inability to work due to a severe impairment.

When I began checking into the incidents of inequities and the number of Social Security Disability reviews, I found that there had been no legislative change in the definition of disability since 1967.

While the disability criteria have not changed, improvements in technology and medical treatment have changed. A condition that was considered disabling several years ago may not be considered disabling today in light of those medical advances.

After a study was made by the General Accounting Office (the best oversight agency I've found out here), Congress passed the Social Security Disability Amendments of 1980. The study estimated that 20 per cent of disabled beneficiaries were ineligible and that the Social Security Administration (SSA) was not re-evaluating enough disability cases. Prior to passage of these amendments, about 155,000 cases were reviewed annually. That number was increased to about 560,000 for Fiscal Year 1982.

I feel that disability claims should be reviewed periodically. However, I believe that the large increase in reviews, without sufficient resources to handle those reviews and a cursory appeals process, is at the root of the problem being experienced by recipients today. Claims are being considered quickly and, unfortunately, in some cases carelessly.

A number of temporary reform measures were taken last year by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) and Congress. Among the changes were provisions requiring personal interviews in local SSA offices for all disability cases; a 20 per cent reduction in the number of disability cases to be reviewed by the State Disability Determination agencies; face-to-face evidentiary hearings at the reconsideration level where new medical evidence may be introduced; and continuation of benefits through the final step of the appeals process.

More importantly, HHS Secretary Margret Heckler announced on June 7 measures that would soften the process and make it fairer. Some of the measures proposed were administrative and would be implemented immediately while some others had to go through the legislative process. The measures proposed by Mrs. Heckler consisted of:

—Slowing down the disability review process by increasing those exempt by fully 25 per cent. This action will ease the workload on state agencies giving them more time to review each case.

—Authorizing a temporary exemption from review of two-thirds, or 135,000 of all mental impairment cases still to be reviewed. That will give HHS time to re-evaluate the program's mental health standards in consultation with appropriate experts.

—Reducing the backlog of appeal cases, giving HHS more time to review the most difficult case. The selection process would be on a more random basis.

—Removing the existing bias against beneficiaries that has crept into the law.

—Accelerating the comprehensive view of all other policies and procedures which affect the people served by this program. The measures proposed here are a product of this review which have already taken place.

With these changes only non-permanently disabled persons would be subject to review. Permanently disabled are now defined as those unable to do any kind of work in the national economy because of the disability, and the condition must be expected to last 12 months or end in death. Although these changes are welcomed, I feel certain other reforms are necessary as well.

So, on June 15, I cosponsored with Senator John Heinz (R-Pennsylvania), who has been active in reviewing the Social Security disability process as Chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, an amendment to the Supplemental Appropriations legislation (H.R. 3069) to suspend periodic reivews of disability beneficiaries having mental impairments until the disability determination process was reformed. I am happy to report that the amendment was approved by the Senate. This amendment requires the SSA to revise, with the aid of mental health experts involved, its regulations for evaluating mental impairments; suspends continuing disability reviews for all of the mentally impaired until the new standards are in place, unless fraud or work activity is involved; and requires a qualified psyhiatrist or psychologist to participate in the disability evaluation of people with severe mental disabilities.

I've been very concerned about the excessive number of disability reviews and the plight of those beneficiaries that are found ineligible at the initial review stage. I feel that this measure allows Congress to protect mentally disabled recipients and still move forward with a fair, periodic review process.

The House of Representatives must now act on this issue. The House passed and sent to the Senate on May 26 the Supplemental Appropriations legislation without the disability amendment. Because the House-passed version differs in this and many other respects from the Senate bill, a joint House-Senate conference will meet to negotiate a compromise appropriations measure. Although I'm not a member of the conference committee, I'll encourage the Senate conferees to do all they can to retain the Heinz amendment in the final version of the legislation.

Area Players At Try-Out Camp

Tim Bergland of Thief River Falls, Craig Mack of East Grand Forks and Jon Brekken of Crookston were invited to attend the try-out camp for the 1984 National Junior Hockey team at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., returning today from the week-long session.

Players chosen for the team will compete in the World Junior Championships, scheduled to be held this winter, Dec. 25-Jan. 3, in Sweden. Coaches were expected to fill 15 of the 20 available teams spots during the try-outs at Colorado Springs, with the remaining positions filled in the fall. However, naming of the squad is not expected to be made for about a month.

"Last year the National team finished fifth," John Perpich, head coach of the 1984 squad, said in a U.S. Olympic Training Center news release, "and that was the best ever. But this group of candidates is better. We've got the 40 best people available, and with 95 per cent of the National Hockey League clubs here, a kid can enhance his chances of being drafted high by doing well here."

Bergland, a 1983 Lincoln high school graduate was a National Hockey League draft pick of the Washington Capitals, the first Minnesotan selected in the annual amateur draft. An outstanding senior year with the Prowlers earned him an athletic scholarship from the University of Minnesota. He was an all-Section 8 and all-state choice, was selected to play in the North-South all-star game and was named to the Team Minnesota roster for an all-star series in Boston against Team Massachusetts.

Brekken was a goalie on last year's U.S. Junior team. A Mount St. Benedict graduate where he was an all-Section 8 and all-state pick, Brekken is currently a member of the Michigan State University hockey squad.

Mack was named the most valuable defenseman in the first North-South high school all-star game this spring and was named the most valuable player for Game 3 in the Minnesota vs. Massachusetts series.

Bergland, Brekken and Mack, along with the rest of the hockey hopefuls, were selected to participate in the try-outs by the sport's national governing body, which indentifies athletes who have the talent and skill to be possible competitors at the Olympic level.

Located at the former Ent Air Base, the U.S. Olympic Training Center facilities have been used by more than 40,000 potential Olympians since its opening in 1978. Director of the world-class facilities is Bob Mathias, 1948 and 1952 Olympic decathlon champion.

Miscellaneous

+ Thief River Falls' Deb Jacobson continues to win titles at area golf tournaments. Her latest accomplishments, gleaned from area papers, include championship flight titles at Bagley and East Grand Forks. She beat Marge Corliss of Thief River Falls 83-88 for the East Grand Forks prize. Other Thief River Falls winners at Bagley included Keks Lee, second flight; Sam Rasmussen, fourth flight; and Jean Helle, fifth flight.

+ Touring PGA golfer Fuzzy Zoeller impressed a crowd of more than 1,000 fans recently at the Detroit Lakes Country Club as he covered the par-71 course in a two-under 69 the first time he had ever seen the lay-out. Zoeller was the feature attraction in the first Lakes Publishing Pro-Gal golf classic. While Zoeller drew the majority of the attention from the fans, Bill Israelson of Bemidji and Brad Schmeier of Hastings shot three-under-par 68's to share the top professional prize, each receiving $750.

+ It was learned that the Normandale community college baseball team that won the 1983 Region 13 tournament played this spring in Thief River Falls and went on to play in the NJCAA national baseball tournament in Colorado was named winner of the tournament's sportsmanship award. Traditionally the winner of the award has been an individual player, but the selection committee decided to name the entire Normandale team because of their collective appearance, personality and behavior was that of a champion Normandale, 27-3 en route to the tournament, is the only Minnesota team to qualify for the NJCAA tournament over the past 15 years.

+ Bemidji high school baseball team, it was reported by Jim Carrington in the Bemidji Pioneer recently, has had only one losing season since 1960. Coach Des Sagedahl, is 119-53-1 in ten years with the Lumberjacks, including a 13-4 finish this spring. Chuck Grillo preceded Sagedahl as coach and in eight years Bemidji was 122-51 under him.

+ Butch Inderrieden of Detroit Lakes, who had been previously announced as a Bemidji State University football recruit, will instead enroll at Mayville State. The 6-5, 260-pounder left a strong impression on the Lincoln high school football team last fall and drew a considerable amount of attention with his size on the hockey rink.

TRF Is Doubleheader Winner Against Grand Forks 3-2, 12-9

Tim Bottem hit a dramatic one-out, two-run home run in the bottom of the seventh inning of the first game and Kirk Jenson had a perfect 6-for-6 night at the plate Friday as Thief River Falls swept a 3-2, 12-9 American Legion baseball doubleheader from the Grand Forks Royals.

It was a great way for Thief River Falls to close out its 1983 home schedule, with the winners' fifth straight win improving their record to 18-6 for the year.

Thief River Falls ends its regular season schedule on the road this week, playing 7 p.m. games at Detroit Lakes Tuesday, at Roseau Wednesday and at Crookston Thursday, along with a 12-noon doubleheader at Fergus Falls Saturday.

Winning coach Nick Drees described the sweep of the perennially strong Royals "fabulous," especially the manner in which it was accomplished — a last-inning home run and a pair of rallies in a come-from-behind second game decision. "We're very satisfied with the way we came back like that. The kids played well. That's probably the best doubleheader we've had against them since we swept them to start the series (four years ago)."

Drees had special words of praise for pitcher Kerry Wollin, who checked Grand Forks on four base hits in the opener, and for Jenson, who was 3-for-3 in both games and has now hit safely in seven straight at-bats over the last three games.

"Kirk has been a very pleasant surprise for us this summer," admitted Drees. "He's played super all year. He's playing centerfield as well as you can play it, and he's hitting the ball with authority. He's probably one of our best ball players right now."

Meanwhile, Grand Forks coach Brian Kraft, while naturally disappointed in the losses, wasn't upset with the decisions. "If we're goinng to get beat, we want to get beat by hits, and Thief River obviously hit the ball well tonight," he explained. "There wasn't anything you could do about those (19) hits. They were almost all hard-hit balls. I thought the first one was an excellent ball game. The second one got away from us."

Grand Forks' twin losses overshadowed a three-homer night by the Royals' Troy Telander, who had never cleared the fences before. The Royals left town 19-9.

A good baseball game from start to finish, the doubleheader opener ended abruptly with one out in the bottom of the seventh on Tim Bottem's long, towering two-run home run over the 340-foot mark in left-center field for a come-from-behind 3-2 Thief River Falls victory.

Jim Hallamek reached base on an infield error to start the seventh and Brian Kemnitz was retired on a fly ball to left field before Bottem belted a one-ball pitch over the fence.

Grand Forks had scored a run in the second inning when Dave Leker walked and went to third on a hit-and-run single through the right side by Tom Montgomery. Leker was nailed at the plate when Troy Telander failed to get his bat on the ball on a suicide squeeze attempt, but Montgomery, having stolen second, moved to third on the play and scored moments later on a wild pitch.

Grand Forks went ahead 2-0 in the sixth when Telander hit his first home run over the left field fence. It could have been more costly, but Pete Obregon, who had walked with one out, had just been picked off first by pitcher Kerry Wollin.

Thief River Falls got a run back in the bottom of the sixth when Wollin led off with a long double to the right-center field fence, moved up on an infield ground-out and scored on a double to left by Kirk Jenson.

YOUNGSTERS LISTENED as Minnesota Twins scout Angelo Giuliani discussed the proper way to throw a baseball during Friday's Minnesota Twins youth baseball clinic held in Thief River Falls. Giuliani, who has been conducting the clinics throughout the Upper Midwest since 1961, along with current clinic partners Glenn Gostic and Mike Casey, gave instructions in the basics of baseball during the two-hour program held at the fairgrounds' Little League Diamond. The Twins' trio was off to Crookston for a Saturday morning clinic on the weekend trip into northwestern Minnesota.

Twins Youth Baseball Clinic Held Here Friday

When Angelo Giuliani, Glenn Gostick and Mike Casey arrived here Friday to present their Minnesota Twins youth baseball clinic, they waited patiently for a game to be completed in the Thief River Falls Bambino League East Division — a game of 10-11-year-olds.

Even though their 5 p.m. clinic starting time had passed, they didn't complain. They never never hinted the game should be stopped so they could begin their program, a two-hour presentation they deliver throughout the Upper Midwest during the summer.

"We don't mind waiting," explained the 71-year-old Giuliani, who has been heading the clinic staff since its inception in 1961. "It's interesting to see the kids play in different communities throughout the area. It's fun to watch the kids — that's been my job for a long time, and I enjoy it."

Giuliani, who was genuinely impressed with Thief River Falls' Little League diamond facilities, has worked with a number of different partners on the Twins' clinic tour, including Bill Kane, Johnny Mauer, long-time University of Minnesota coach Dick Siebert and Billy Martin, the highly-publicized manager of the New York Yankees. "I taught Billy everything he knows," laughed Giuliani, who doubles as a Twins scout. "It's the eternal search," is the way he described the scouting part of it. "Hopefully it pays off, but sometimes you wonder."

He has come across a number of players who were once participants in his clinics who went on to play major league baseball with the Twins, including Dave Goltz, Jerry Crider Jerry Terrell, Gary Serum, Mike Poepping and Tommy Johnson. Right now there are 18 Minnesota natives playing in the major league, a figure that Giuliani takes a great deal of pride in.

Hopefully, he said, the clinics have played a role in the development of baseball in the state. "We try to help start them out right," explained Giuliani. "After that, the natural talent will take over. This isn't a program of how to play the game strategy-wise. It's a program that teaches the kids the fundamentals of the game of baseball, and there are eight of them: throwing, fielding, base running, sliding, catching, pitching, hitting and bunting."

It's estimated that some half-million youngsters have participated in the program over the years. It's a pleasure, noted Giuliani, when fathers bring their kids to the program then stop by and tell the staff menbers how they were once clinic participants themselves.

"We've had a lot of fun through it all," acknowledged Giuliani. "We always look forward to it."

Before taking the field for their program, Giuliani took a moment to praise Minnesota Twins owner Calvin Griffith. "I know a lot of people criticize Calvin and say he won't spend any money," he noted. "But if it wasn't for Calvin Griffith, there wouldn't be a program like this. He doesn't have to do this, but without his backing we wouldn't have lasted this long."

Babe Ruth 13-Year-Olds . . .

TRF Wins State Tourney Berth

Thief River Falls Babe Ruth Prep baseball team for 13-year-olds capped an outstanding 1983 season with a state tournament-qualifying District 7 tournament title Sunday at East Grand Forks.

Winning the five-team, double-elimination tournament with a 3-0 record pushed Thief River Falls' record to an impressive 28-1 for the year. Thief River Falls beat Roseau 8-1 Friday, blanked Crookston 7-0 Saturday and out-scored Roseau 13-7 in the finals Sunday.

"We played well, but we didn't play as well as we have," acknowledged Thief River Falls coach Doug Hanke.

Thief River Falls will participate in the state Babe Ruth Prep tournament in St. Louis Park, a week-long, 11-team, double-elimination affair that starts Saturday. Thief River Falls will make its tournament debut Sunday at 4 p.m. against an as-of-yet-unnamed opponent. Thief River Falls' second game will be played next Tuesday, at 10 a.m. if they are in the loser's bracket or 6 p.m. if they are in the winner's bracket.

Henke said the players are looking forward to the opportunity to play in a state tournament. The first-year 19-year-old coach played in the 1982 Minnesota state high school baseball tournament as a member of Red Lake Falls' Region 8A championship team.

District 7 tournament play started Friday when No. 5-seeded Roseau knocked off No. 4-seeded East Grand Forks 13-4; No. 2-seeded Crookston handled No. 3-seeded Warroad 11-6; No. 1-seeded Thief River Falls beat Roseau 8-1; and East Grand Forks eliminated Warroad 14-4 in the loser's bracket.

On Saturday, Thief River Falls shut out Crookston 7-0; Roseau sidelined East Grand Forks 10-8; and Roseau ousted Crookston 16-9. The tournament ended with Thief River Falls' 13-7 victory over Roseau Sunday afternoon.

TRF 8, Roseau 1

Mike Anderson was 3-for-3 at the plate while winning pitcher Chris Nelson stopped Roseau on a pair of hits as Thief River Falls won by an 8-1 margin Friday afternoon.

Billy Dicken was 2-for-4 for the winners, who had nine hits and a 5-1 lead through three innings.

TRF 7, Crookston 0

Kurt Dupree pitched a two-hit shutout as Thief River Falls handled Crookston 7-0 in a match-up of the tournament's final two-unbeaten teams Saturday morning.

The winners mustered just four hits themselves, but still scored runs, taking a 3-0 lead and turning it into a 7-0 cushion in the sixth.

TRF 13, Roseau 7

Roseau, the tournament's bottom-seeded team, challenged Thief River Falls, the tournament's top-seeded squad, before surrendering a 13-7 championship game decision Saturday afternoon.

Out-hit 10-2, Roseau still had battled to a 4-4 tie through three innings. Thief River Falls opened up a 7-4 lead in the fourth when Billy Dicken hit a two-run, inside-the-park home run. The two teams traded three-run fifth innings, but Thief River Falls finally put it away with its third consecutive three-run frame in the sixth.

Chris Nelson was 3-for-3 while Kent Hamre and Scott Vedbraaten were both 2-for-4 at the plate for the winners.

Dicken sandwiched a relief job in between a start and a finish by Nelson to collect the win, with Thief River Falls pitching recording its third two-hitter of the tournament.

Popplers, held to just two hits through the first six innings, put a single, triple and double together in the bottom of the seventh inning Friday for a pair of runs and then went on to hand previously unbeaten Neibauer's a 3-2 nine-inning setback in the Thief River Falls men's fast pitch softball league.

Neubauer's had taken a 1-0 lead in the top of the first inning as Nick Neibauer led off with a double to left and scored on a sacrifice fly by Mike Kvarnlov.

It became 2-0 in the fifth when Jeff Cwikla singled to center, advanced to second on a passed ball and scored on a single by Nick Neibauer.

Popplers started its seventh inning rally with two out as Rick Kofstad singled and scored on a triple by Murray Dicken. Tom Ronchetti followed with a double to right for the tying run.

In the tenth, Joel Carlson reached base on an error and moved to second on a passed ball. Don Forney then provided the heroics with a double to right field for the game-winning run, ending Neibauer's season-long eight-game winning streak.

Neibauer's did bounce back to sweep Melvies 7-0 and 9-5 to complete a Friday night tripleheader for the league leaders.

Al Erickson was the winning pitcher in both Neibauer's wins, with Rick Kofstad and Erv Melvies tagged with the losses.

In the 7-0 first-game win, Darrell Stromlund had two hits and three RBI's, a feat matched by Mike Kvarnlov in the final game.

In Thursday's lone game, Popplers drilled Melvies 12-1 as Jeff Hendrickson and Mark Schmitke collected three hits each, with Schmitke driving in four runs and Hendrickson picking up the pitching win, striking out nine. Rick Kofstad took the loss as Popplers built up a 12-2 base hit edge.

WHILE PARTICIPANTS listened to Angelo Giuliani during Friday's Minnesota Twins youth baseball clinic conducted in Thief River Falls, Glenn Gostick (left) and Mike Casey of the clinic staff talked things over before they got involved in the two-hour instructional program.

SURROUNDED BY attentive listeners, instructor Milan Badger discussed points of the game during one of last week's sessions of the Mobile Sports volleyball camp held in Thief River Falls. Husband-wife team of Milan and Marie Bader directed the camp, designed for girls entering grades 4-12 this fall. Sessions were held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday in the Lincoln high school and Franklin middle school gyms. Milan, a native of Czechoslovakia where he played volleyball, coached the sport at the club level and was a member of the country's selection committee for the women's national team, has coached Lakeville high school to the Region 1AA volleyball tournament finals the past five years, earning Minnesota state tournament berths in 1981 and 1982. His volleyball coaching record at Lakeville and New Hope is 163-43.

Adopt New Law On Lights For Spotting Game

Minnesota legislature adopted a new law on using artificial lights to spot or locate wild animals, according to the Minnesota department of natural resources.

The law provides that between the hours of 10 p.m. and 6 a.m., from September 1 to December 31, it will be unlawful to "cast the rays of a spotlight, headlight or other artificial light in any field, woodland or forest for the purpose of spotting, locating or taking any wild animal except for taking raccoons in accordance with the provision of Subdivision 10."

The law further provides that it is not a violation for any person to carry out any agricultural, occupational or recreational practice, including snowmobiling, which is not related to spotting, locating or taking any wild animal.

The bill was authored by Sen. Gene Merriam of Coon Rapids and Rep. Neuenschwander of International Falls with strong support by the Minnesota Deer Hunters association.

State conservation officer Craig Backer of Thief River Falls points out that the legislation is an attempt to cut down on deer poaching in the state. Persons who wish to simply observe a deer, moose and other wildlife between the September 1 and December 31 dates will now have to confine their use of artificial lights to the period before 10 p.m.

Backer said it has been common practice for some poachers to cruise their home areas with spotlights to locate deer or moose in specific areas, then return home for a gun, go out and shoot the animal and return for it later. The short time span involved in taking and animal made apprehension extremely difficult.

Greatest opposition to the law came from northwestern Minnesota where observing bear at garbage dumps has become a recreational venture.

An additional feature of the bill was making the possession of an illegally-taken big game animal a gross misdemeanor. Previously the violation was only a misdemeanor. Making the violation a gross misdemeanor provides for heavier penalties for conviction.

early 3-0 first inning deficit wasn't so surprising, but the fact that the winners rebounded again after falling behind 5-3 in the second inning had even coach Nick Drees a little shocked after a 12-9 second-game triumph.

"It was great to come back and win it like that after we were down twice," acknowledged Drees. "Since we're not known for our great hitting, it was a little surprising, I guess."

Grand Forks collected four base hits in the top of the first inning, including a two-run home run down the left field line by Troy Telander and an RBI single to left by Mike Leach to jump in front 3-0.

Thief River Falls tied it in the bottom of the inning when two runs scored on Kerry Wollin's bloop opposite field single inside the right field line and on an RBI single to left by Kirk Jenson.

But Telander hit his second two-run home run of the game, this one curling around the left field foul pole, for a 5-3 Grand Forks lead in the second inning.

Thief River Falls exploded offensively, though, in the third to break the game open, as the winners batted through the order without an out, collecting eight hits and a walk — seven consecutive hits. Wollin had a two-run double to the right-center field gap, Jenson bounced an RBI single up the middle, Bob Huot went to right field for a two-run double just inside the line on relief pitcher Rick Acker's first pitch and Jim Hallamek dropped a single into short center field for two runs. Then with one out, Tim Bottem swung and missed at a third strike. The ball got by catcher Jim Riley, though, forcing a throw to first to get the second out. Telander, playing first, then threw the ball away trying to double up a runner at third, allowing the final two runs of the inning to score for a sudden 12-5 gap.

Drees, who replaced starter Tim Nyland on the mound in the second inning, limited Grand Forks to just two singles through the middle of the game before four base hits and an error allowed the Royals to make a run at the Thief River Falls lead in the seventh. The gap closed to 12-9 and the tying run was at the plate in the wild finish before pinch hitter Tom Montgomery was retired on an infield pop-up.

THE VOICE of BUSINESS

U.S. Chamber of Commerce

In Charles Dickens' immortal story, "A Christmas Carol", Ebenezer Scrooge is confronted on Christmas Eve by the chain-covered ghost of his former business partner, Jacob Marley.

Marley's message was curt and terrifying: Change your ways or you too will suffer my fate.

The evening of June 9, 1983, American liberals saw a similarly ominous ghost. It was the ghost of the Labour Party in Britain. Or rather what is left of the socialist-leaning Labour Party after their stunning defeat at the hands of Margaret Thatcher and the Conservative Party of Britain. It was their worst defeat in 60 years.

The defeat was well deserved.

When Margaret Thatcher was elected Prime Minister in 1979, she inherited an economy and national spirit in decline. The ever-increasing British Welfare state had put more industries, services and power in the hands of Parliament and stripped them from the once self-reliant British people. Tax rates on wage and interest income hit levels as high as 80 and 90 per cent. During the 1970s powerful labor unions had pushed wages up 346 per cent while productivity had increased by only 26 per cent. Strikes paralyzed the nation on a regular basis. And the welfare and unemployment benefits rose so high that for many the decision not to work made economic sense.

British productivity slipped to below 70 per cent of that of her European neighbors and British goods were priced out of the world market. Nationalized industries required billions in government subsidies just to keep their doors open and their inflated payrolls intact.

Before Thatcher's election in 1979, it looked as through the nation where the Industrial Revolution began would find the "British disease" to be fatal. But Thatcher and her Conservative Party went to work to reverse those trends and restore the "Great" in Great Britain.

The growth of the money supply was reduced and inflation fell to 4.6 per cent, a 15-year low. The number of the government employees was slashed by 12 per cent. Enterprise Zones were established across Britain and over 20,000 new businesses began to innovate and hire new employees. The confiscatory high marginal tax rates were brought down and taxes were shifted to consumption based taxes.

Under Thatcher's leadership nationalized industries were sold to the private sector and over half a million individuals were able to buy their government-owned houses and become homeowners with pride and a stake in the future.

Changes in the labor laws of the nation brought relative industrial peace with the lowest number of union disputes in more than 40 years. And productivity jumped 17 per cent in the years since 1980 — growing faster than Japan's.

Unemployment remains too high, but the British voters were not seduced by the Labour platform which promised to repeat and expand on the failures of the past. The Labour Manifesto for the June 9 election promised more government spending, higher taxes, a return to protectionism, Neville Chamberlain style disarmament, and more inflation. (If this sounds familiar, you have been reading the speeches of some of our American liberal candidates for president.)

The British voters rejected Labour's kind offer to return to the discredited policies of big government and I predict that in November 1984 the American People will follow their example.

Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher have proven that lower taxes and greater reliance on individual initiative are sound policy. Now, Mrs. Thatcher has shown — for those who doubted — that sound policy is also a winner at the polling booth.

American liberals take heed.

Strandquist Senior Citizens News

Thursday, July 7th we met at the hangout for our regular weekly meeting with 14 present, Jim Kline Jr. and Ingvald Rokke were guests. We also brought lunch to Eulalie Stalock, Ellen Stromberg and Iola Rokke so they were also guests for the lunch.

Anna H. and Polly finished sewing around the crazy quilt, and most of the other ladies fluffed up Arctic scraps for more pillows.

Ruth Harper read the treasurer's report. Three door prizes were given away and Anna Rud, Elsie K. and Louis were the lucky winners.

We prayed the table grace and Louis and Eunice Lofstrom were host and hostess.

Card of Thanks

We want to say a big "thank you" to the St. Hilaire Centennial committee, Bernard Huot, Earl Frazer, Bonnie Pederson, Evelyn Treitline, Emil Harbot, Jr., Earl Hoeler, Ron McKercher and countless other people for all the work they did to make the St. Hilaire Centennial a super success.

We also want to commend the school reunion committee, Woodrow Almquist, Dorothy and Kermit Hanson, Pearl Drees, Isabel Gibbs, Vernon Lindquist, and Lucille Yonke for an excellent banquet and get-together for the former students of the St. Hilaire school.

In spite of the weather the whole Centennial celebration was a huge success that did justice to the fact that it comes only once every one hundred years.

Thanks to all of you!!

H. Contracts and Disposal.

2. Where the City enters into a contract with a person duly licensed by the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency, the Agency shall review the contract to determine whether it conforms to the Agency's plan for solid waste disposal. B. The public sanitary sewer connection permit fee is $30.00.

Heart Ass'n. Receives Six Memorial Gifts

Research and programs for the prevention and control of heart disease have been aided by the gifts in memory of Martha Knauf, Alfred Longren, Shorty (Clair) O'Hara, Ole Fladeland, Clarence Rucktaeschel and Jerry Wedul.

In reporting the contributions, the heart fund memorial county representative stated, "A memorial gift to the American heart association, Minnesota affiliate is a thoughtful way to express sympathy while also doing something positive to aid the fight against heart disease. It not only comforts those in grief, it also helps reduce the toll of heart disease — the killer of more Americans than all other causes combined." In Minnesota, over 52 per cent of all deaths are from heart disease. Even in the 45-64 age group heart disease is the leading cause of death.

Memorial gifts including the name and address of the person making the gift, the person being honored, the occasion, and the name and address of the person who should receive the acknowledgement should be made to either:

Memorial chairperson, Pennington county, Mrs. David Drotts, 106 Park View, Thief River Falls, MN 56701 or American Heart Association, 1007 Westside Drive, Fergus Falls, MN 56537.

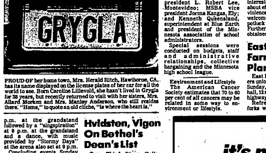
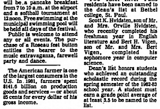
New officers who will be guiding the club for the coming year include: (left to right) Steve Hagen, secretary; Ken Kesterke, past president; Dave Crowser, second vice president; Jay Field president; Stan Wik, Lion tamer; and Steve Rundell, first vice president. Missing from the picture is Steve Hagenah, tail twister. The club meets at 6 p.m. on the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month, at the Rex Cafe.



BACKED UP by 4-H leader Kathy Carlson, Carla Sorenson of the Happy Acres 4-H club faced Judge Sharon Nelson's questions about the techniques and materials used in construction of an outfit she had sewn. Carla was entered in the beginner class of annual 4-H fashion revue judging on Thursday. High temperatures and humidity added to the pressure, but organizers attempted to minimize the discomfort by moving events traditionally held in the city auditorium to various locations to take advantage of available air conditioning.



PROUD OF her home town, Mrs. Herald Ritch, Hawthorne, CA, has its name displayed on the license plates of her car for all the world to see. Born Caroline Lillevold, she hasn't lived in Grygla for 38 years, but recently returned to visit with her sisters, Mrs. Allard Morken and Mrs. Manley Anderson, who still resides there. "Home," to quote an old cliche, "is where the heart is."

Binsfeld Has Plans To Build Disposal Plant

Art Binsfeld, an opponent of the hazardous waste landfill system proposed by the Minnesota waste management board, has formed a company called Reclamation Technologies, Inc., which he says will provide a combination of activities to handle hazardous waste.

Procedural steps for the $38 million project are to begin by the end of this month, Binsfeld, said, with the start of construction in 12 to 14 months. He said there are six potential sites, with three under option, and including two in Stearns county, two elsewhere in central Minnesota, one in northeastern Minnesota and another in a Twin Cities suburb.

Binsfeld claims the state waste management board has not moved fast enough on its finding solutions to the state's hazardous waste problem. He has been an advocate of above ground storage.

Binsfeld's proposed plant on a 160-acre site would reportedly include an incinerator to destroy organic wastes such as oils and solvents, chemical treatments to neutralize acids and other chemicals and reduce the volumes or poisonous characteristics of other wastes; a stabilization process to immobilize some wastes in a rock-like substance; conversion of regular solid waste into "refuse-derived fuel" which can be burned in any coal boiler without fear of significant sulfur emissions; a tank farm to hold sludges and other liquid wastes until they can be treated; and a research laboratory to find ways to cut down on waste production and enable industries to treat wastes at their own plants.

Chairman Robert Dunn of the Minnesota waste management board said Binsfeld's proposal is not at odds with what the WMB wants to see done.

The carnival arrived in Thief River Falls on Sunday after tearing down in Hamilton, ND, Saturday night. The several day respite before the fair opening here today permitted time to give the rides a thorough pressure washing the clean-up in preparation for the crowds expected the next five days. Harness Racing To Open 82nd County Fair Today

Entry day will be tomorrow and livestock judging will take place on Friday. The fair will extend through Sunday with the Jaycee-sponsored demolition derby Sunday night as the concluding event.

Main grandstand attraction booked by the county fair association this year is the Charley Pride show which will play for two performances at 7 and 9:15 p.m. Friday in front of the grandstand. If weather is not cooperative, the concerts will be moved to the Lincoln high school gymnasium. Decision on the location is expected to be made by noon Friday.

Other grandstand attractions include Thursday night's Grandstand Jam, a rock music concert from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. with "Justin Tyme" and "Escape" providing the music; Saturday afternoon's tractor and pickup pull; Saturday night's 4-H club horse show; and Sunday afternoon's 4-H dress revue and senior citizens program.

Horses for tonight's harness racing began arriving yesterday and are stabled in the horse barns in the fairgrounds. Both trotters and pacers will be involved in the six heats of racing on tonight's program which begins at 6:30 p.m. Stables represented are from Cavalier and Bathgate, ND, Verndale, Delano, Clarkfield, Kandiyohi, Brooten and Madison, MN.

Three separate one-mile races are on tonight's racing program, each involving two heats of timed racing. Several of the horses racing tonight have raced at Assiniboia Downs in Winnipeg in previous years and will be racing there when the harness season starts in October.

Milford Olson of Clarkfield, who has been driving harness horses for 42 years, has raced in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Canada, and for three years raced at Littleton, CO. One of his horses racing here tonight, "Sirs Lovely Lady", was harness horse of the year in Minnesota (based on points total) two years ago and missed the title last year by two points. The seven-year-old gray mare recently turned in a 2:08 mile at Hamilton, ND, missing the track record by only one second.

Also racing tonight will be Janice Backlund, currently the only woman driver on the Minnesota Harness Racing association circuit. She has been driving for 11 years and had a good beginning by winning the first two races she entered in 1972. Because of the limited number of horses available, both trotters and pacers will be entered in the same races. Admission will be $4 for adults and $2 for children 12 and younger.

Fair board president Skip Swanson reminds participants in the harness racing, demolition derby and tractor and pickup pull to use the northwest entrance to the fairgrounds off Sixth street. Livestock exhibitors may use the south entrance off highway 59 only on entry day and on Sunday night for livestock

Kids' Trip To Brainerd Set By NW Library

Northwest regional library is sponsoring a children's trip to Brainerd on August 4. Registration forms are available from library headquarters in Thief River Falls and must be completed by July 28. Children must have attended kindergarten last year in order to be eligible.

Stops will be made at the Paul Bunyan amusement center and Lumbertown USA. At the amusement center, the children will observe antics of the trained animals as well as visit Paul Bunyan and Babe the blue ox. All children going on the trip will be able to eat sack lunches in the park before boarding the bus to go to Lumbertown USA.

Lumbertown USA is a collection of 30 old buildings including a livery, blacksmith shop, country schoolhouse, general store and a fully operational ice cream parlour where children may buy old-fashioned ice cream served in old-fashioned dishes. Highlighting the visit will be rides on both a replica of the first Northern Pacific railroad train and the riverboat Blue Berry Belle.

Dinner will be eaten at a restaurant. The group will leave the library at 7 a.m. and arrive back around 9:30 p.m. Cost of the trip is $10.00. This includes transportation, entry fee to Paul Bunyan amusement center and Lumbertown USA and the dinner stop.

CHARLEY PRIDE, considered one of the hottest stars on the country stage circuit, will be in Thief River Falls Friday for two performances at the Pennington county fair. Shows will be presented at 7 and 9:15 p.m. in the front of the grandstand or, in case of bad weather, in the Lincoln high school gymnasium.

Armstrong Shows Another Business

"We're in the same situation as any other business — trying to keep the prices down to where the public can afford it but keep pace so we can make our payments and stay in operation."

That's the summation made by Mike Armstrong of Westlake, LA, who assists in managing the Matt Armstrong Shows carnival for his parents. It is one of the reasons the carnival offers three "kiddies days" today, Friday and Sunday from noon to 6 p.m., when for a single $7 price youngsters can ride all the rides they like.

The Armstrong family has been involved in the carnival business for 33 years, first as concession operators and for the past 15 years as owners. Earnings have been plowed back into the operation as is the case with most beginning businesses, and the Matt Armstrong carnival now owns nearly all of its own equipment.

"My parents probably have a couple of million dollars tied up in this show," Mike said in a brief interview Tuesday outside his travel trailer at the Pennington county fairgrounds. "We have 20 rides and the cheapest one costs $30,000," he said. "The most expensive one we have cost $275,000, but there are some rides that can be imported from Europe that go on up to a million dollars. They only play the big shows where they can take in a lot of bucks in a hurry!"

The carnival has about 40 full-time employees who travel with the show, more than half of whom have been with the Matt Armstrong carnival for three to 15 years. In addition the carnival hires local labor for set-up, teardown and operations while in each community. It takes a fleet of 35 trucks to move the carnival from town to town.

"Usually you can get an idea of the economic condition of a community by the number of people who show up looking for work when we come to town," Mike Armstrong said. "We heard that Thief River Falls is having some tough financial times, but we never had anybody show up looking for work when we came to town on Sunday or set up on Monday."

The Matt Armstrong carnival opens its spring season with the Mardi Gras in New Orleans, LA, in February or March. By the time it ends its fall season in late November, it will have traveled about 10,000 miles and appeared in about 35 places from the South to the Midwest. In addition to Thief River Falls, where the carnival has been booked for the last six or seven years, the show plays Hallock, Littleford and Brainerd in Minnesota.

"We tear down here Sunday night and open at Littlefork next-Wednesday," Armstrong said. "Then we have to tear down there the next Sunday night and be ready to operate in Brainerd at noon Monday."

He admits that it is a dif-

LISA PERREAULT of Red Lake Falls is among the eight candidates seeking the Miss Thief River Falls title this year. She was selected Miss Red Lake Falls at the sno-fest there last winter. Lisa is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Perreault of rural Red Lake Falls and a 1983 graduate of Lafayette high school there.

Lisa Perreault In Queen Event

(This is the eighth in a series of articles on candidates for the Miss Thief River Falls title at the Jaycee Summerfest. The scholarship pageant, an official Miss America preliminary event, will be presented on Saturday, July 30, at 8 p.m. in the Lincoln high school auditorium. Tickets are now on sale at Ekeren Drug and Larson Music company.)

by Marvin Lundin
Times Editor

Currently holding the title of Miss Red Lake Falls which she earned at Sno-Fest activities last winter, Lisa Marie Perreault was active in sports and music activities while in Lafayette high school at Red Lake Falls.

Lisa Marie, 17, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Perreault of rural Red Lake Falls and a 1983 graduate of Lafayette high school. She is five feet four inches tall, weighs 108 pounds, has brown hair and hazel eyes. Her talent number for the pageant will be a dramatic reading.

Lisa participated in the Red Lake Falls basketball program for seven years, earning letters as a junior and senior, and also participated in the band program for seven years. She sang in school and church choirs for two years, was parliamentarian for the office education association and a member of the high school annual staff.

As a member of the OEA she worked at the Minnesota Wheat Growers association offices and with the special education cooperative program. She has been a religion teacher at the parish church at Gentilly, holds a part time job at the Gentilly Farmers Mutual association and is also a waitress at RBJ's in Crookston.

Lisa's family includes three older brothers — Jeff, 22; Brian, 21; and Kevin, 19 — and two younger sisters, Angie, 16 and Naomi, 7. She enjoys reading, embroidery, writing and poetry as leisure activities and will attend the University of Minnesota at Crookston this fall.

Count Before Spraying For Armyworms

Pennington county extension director Terry Courneya urges area grain farmers to check their fields for possible armyworm infestations. Economically important numbers of the worms are present in a limited number of fields in the Mavie area, Courneya said. Several fields in the Oklee-Gully and Gatzke areas also have required spraying.

It is important to check closely and make an accurate estimate of the worm numbers, the agent cautions. Five worms per square foot on an average is considered an economically important level and warrants chemical control.

The armyworm typically is not uniformly dispersed throughout a field. It can often be found in numbers exceeding 25 per square foot in isolated spots while other areas of the field are not affected. One should not panic if high numbers are present in small portions of the field where grain has lodged or where grassy weeds are present, Courneya said. They are usually worst in the early planted fields as well.

Supplies of approved chemicals that provide effective and economical control are quite limited in this area. Farmers are encouraged not to panic and make the decision to spray in haste. A complete and deliberate check of the entire field is essential and can save unnecessary costs. Check with your chemical dealer as early as possible to permit timely delivery of approved and effective chemicals, the extension director advised.

Sr. Federation Meets Thurs.

Northwest senior federation will hold its bi-monthly meeting tomorrow (Thursday) at 10 a.m. at the basement meeting room of the city auditorium. All seniors are invited to attend.

Town Officers Meet Thursday In Newfolden

Township officers from the area have been invited to attend an informational meeting Thursday at the Newfolden community center beginning at 8 p.m. Topic will be budgeting for townships in view of projected cuts in governmental aid for 1984.

Larry Bjoraness of Newfolden will provide an update from the legislative and research committee of the Marshall county association of township officers. Charles Cheney, Marshall county auditor, will show how much a one-mill levy will bring to any given township. Update on how the gasoline tax affects township budgeting will also be presented.

Coffee and doughnuts will be served at the close of the meeting.

Book Sale Set On July 28th At NW Library

Northwest regional library is holding a Crazy Days book sale from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. July 28, on the sidewalk in front of the library.

Hardcover books will be sold for 35 cents each or three for $1. Paperback books will be sold for 20 cents each or six for $1. Old magazines will also be sold. Proceeds from the sale will go towards purchase of new magazine covers.

Pride's Voice 'Made To Sing Country Music'

"If there was ever a voice made to sing country music, it was Charley Pride's," is the way one journalist described the country singer who will be a headline attraction at the Pennington county fair Friday night.

Performances will be at 7 and 9:15 p.m. and tickets are available in advance for $9 and $11. Admission at the gate will be $11 and $13 for those seats remaining. All seats are reserved. Beginning at noon today, advance tickets will be available from the fair board's ticket booth to be located by the sports arena on the Pennington county fairgrounds.

Charley Pride has joined a growing number of country music singers whose music is now being heard beyond the traditional country audiences. As a stage performer he is considered to be one of the hottest tickets in the country music field, selling out performances in England, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Japan as well as the United States.

"Even though I appreciate fame and adoration, I remember once I used to pick cotton, and I felt like even then I was somebody," he says. "I

Nominations To Hospital Board Are Announced

Nominations for election of trustees to the board of Northwestern Hospital services in Thief River Falls have been made by the nominating committee and membership in the association has until August 15 to submit further nominations.

Trustees whose terms expire this year include Roger Reuter, Chris Twomey and Darrell Bakke. These incumbents have been renominated, together with Dale Dillon, Rodney Brodin and Angeline Steinhauer. Three trustees are to be elected for three-year terms.

In addition, the board of trustees in late June adopted a change in the by-laws which provides for an expansion of the board of trustees from 11 to 12 members, and the election of a physician representative to fill that additional trusteeship. Dr. Arnold Berg and Dr. Duane Davidson have been nominated for that physician trustee position.

By-laws of the association also provide the following:

"In addition to the slate of candidates nominated by the nominating committee, any member of this corporation may submit in writing to the corporate office by noon on or before August 15 a list of one or more candidates from among the membership of the corporation for nomination to the board of trustees. Such additional nominations shall be accompanied by each nominee's written consent, and shall contain the signatures of five other members of the corporation."

Richard Spyhalski, president of the hospital, said that the election of trustees will take place at the annual meeting of the association on Monday, September 12. He also thanked the nominating committee which was chaired by Henrietta Ness and included Verne Spengler, Lowell Swenson, Terry Courneya and Roy Lee.

Paving Begins This Week On Highway 59

Paving operations will begin this week on a resurfacing job on highway 59 between Thief River Falls and Erskine. Work will begin on improvements to highway 59 between First street and County Road 62 in Thief River Falls and construction of a traffic signal at First street within two weeks. These jobs are expected to be completed sometime in October.

According to Cliff Larson, resident engineer for the Minnesota department of transportation in Thief River Falls, these improvements are tied together in a contract held by Duininck Bros. & Gilchrist of Prinsburg. Cost of this project is $3,819,079.

Traffic will be maintained on the highway 59 roadway at all times and motorists are urged to exercise caution when driving through construction zones.

Pride's Voice Made To Sing Country Music

have the same feet, hands and heart as everyone else. I'm just blessed with a good voice."

One of 11 children in the Pride family of Sledge, Mississippi, a small town 60 miles south of Memphis, he earned his living picking cotton for $3 per 100 pounds alongside his brothers and sisters until he was 17 years old.

He played baseball in the Negro American League with Detroit and the Memphis Red Sox until entering military service in the late 1950's. Returning to baseball, he made it to the major leagues for a brief period in 1961, playing outfield and pitching for the Los Angeles Angels. His dreams of playing baseball have never died, and he goes to spring training with the Texas Rangers every year.

Also attracted to music at an early age — the family radio was usually turned to a Nashville, TN, station — he learned country songs by heart and later purchased a guitar through a mail order catalog.

"I was blessed with five senses the same as anybody else, and I heard music on the radio, broadcast from the Grand Old Opry, that appealed to my ears. I wasn't going to deny myself the enjoyment of that music just because of my environment, because people might ask 'Why are you singing THEIR songs?' After all, I didn't make society, I was born into it," Pride is quoted as explaining.

In addition to establishing himself as a leader in the field, he has assisted in the careers of such other artists as Dave & Sugar, Ronnie Milsap, Gary Stewart, Johnny Duncan and Johnny Russell.

It was 20 years ago when he sang with Red Sovine and Red Foley on the stage at Helena, MT, after catching their attention with his version of "Lovesick Blues". And it was 1965 when he cut his first single, "Snakes Crawl at Night", which became the first of his many hits. In the past 18 years he has recorded more than 40 albums and well over 50 singles.

Often appearing on network television programs and several TV talk shows, he is in strong demand for tour dates across the country.

School District Business Heard Monday Night

Members of the School District 564 board of education waded through a high tide of business items — including a wide variety of personnel items — at the regular meeting conducted Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the school district service center.

Approval was given to obtain quotations on a cargo van for use by the buildings and grounds department and to call for bids on group life insurance beginning September 1. Bid of $1,500 from Philip Fallis for a 1973 IHC school bus was accepted, as was a contract with Richard Levandowski for engineering services at the AVTI radio station KAVS.

Operation of the cross country extra curricular program was approved if total funds of approximately $2,500 are raised by the community by August 1. Expenditure of $3,810 from the community education fund balance was approved for use to help support the childred and parents learning together program.

Discussion was held on the use of alcoholic beverages on school property as it relates to softball fields near the AVTI. Board members suggested discussion with the city of Thief River Falls and a possible use agreement with the city to cover potential liability.

Request by Dr. Milton Hoff, principal at Franklin middle school, for expenditure of $2,300 to purchase new health books was delayed until the next meeting pending review by the board of textbooks recommended.

Membership in the Minnesota state high school league was renewed and appointments of Francis (Butch) Koehmstedt, Janice Nelson, Warren Hermreck and Verne Spengler as members of the high school agriculture advisory committee were approved.

Towel service fee for students was discussed but no action taken. At present students are required to provide their own towels for physical education classes.

Hourly rates for substitutes on the non-certified staff were established at $4.25 for aides, $5 for secretaries and $6 for confidential employees and custodians. Drug and chemical use policy was approved as presented.

Board decision was made to tour the Lincoln high school building before the August 8 meeting to receive an update on current conditions before holding further discussion on facility improvement.

Leaves of absence were approved for Lee Broeker, communications instructor, and Paul Vogt, chemistry instructor at Lincoln. Maternity leave was approved for Karin Hanson from approximately October 10 through December 2, and medical leave for Mary Forney from August 29 through January 31. Resignation of Kay Anderson as AVTI accounting instructor was accepted.

Supt. Robert Block informed the board that a parent had requested an audience with the board concerning a complaint against a staff member. It was recommended that a time be set up during the next meeting to hear the complaint with the staff member present.

Hired were Dean Dalen, AVTI remedial related math instructor and technical tutor; Jim Hahn, AVTI auto mechanics instructor; Christi Halbasch, half-time AVTI bookstore aide; Julie Peterson, TMH management aide at Lincoln annex; Ida Frodahl, attendance aide at Lincoln; Ardelle Offerdahl, preschool handicapped program aide; and Bruce Lawrence, AVTI electronics instructor. Rod Johnson was recalled from unrequested leave as AVTI carpentry instructor.

Extra-curricular assignments approved were: Steve Kruta, grade seven boys basketball coach; Lambert Brunkhorst, grade six intramural football coach; Brent Schmitz, grade six intramural football coach; Howard Thorson, grade seven intramural football coach; Myron Peterson and Ron Novak, grade eight traveling football coaches; Peggy Lawrence and Lynette Huot, grades six, seven and eight girls volleyball coaches; Lynette Huot, grade seven girls basketball coach; Marlys Huot, grade eight girls basketball coach; Walt Redinger, grade six boys basketball coach; and Myron Peterson, grade eight boys basketball coach.

Supt. Block also informed the board that a $61,000 equipment grant for the AVTI electronics program had been received.

Discussion was held on the legislative mandate for the AVTI and Northland community college to devise a plan for saving money through cooperative efforts between the two institutions. The plan is to be formulated by November 1.

Regular meeting of the board July 25 was canceled and a special meeting was slated for August 2 at 7 a.m. in the board room to discuss the superintendent and board evaluations and other business.

Ag Secretary Alerted To Relief Needs

Congressman Arlan Stangeland has asked agriculture secretary John Block to be ready for fast action on disaster relief requests by farmers in six Minnesota counties.

Clay, Polk, Norman, Red Lake, Pennington and Wilkin counties were drenched in heavy rains this spring. A heavy storm on July 2 dropped an additional three to seven inches of rain on already-soaked crops.

"For some of these areas, this would be the third consecutive year with ruined crops," Congressman Stangeland told Block. "Your quick action will be needed to ease this disaster and to help farmers to prepare for next year.

The four-term House veteran noted that banks, PCAs and FLBs are reluctant to loan funds to farmers because they fear the Farmer's Home administration will not act as the "lender for last resort" for disaster-stricken farmers who cannot get loans elsewhere.

"You must make it clear that FHA will stand by these farmers who have gone three years without a full crop," Congressman Stangeland said. "Swift action on the upcoming requests for disaster relief will restore confidence for these hard-working people."

Congressman Stangeland also asked Secretary Block to use discretionary authority to approve FmHA relief to counties where even a small number of farmers lose 30 per cent of their projected crop yields.

"FmHA should provide relief on the basis of crops lost by individual farmers," he said. "The current method of using a county-wide average often makes crop damage look much less serious than it actually is."

Congressman Stangeland said he had won appeals for disaster declarations for Red Lake and Pennington county farmers in each of the past two years and obtained disaster relief for Polk and Clearwater county farmers in 1981.

Carnival Is Just Business On The Road

ficult task to maintain a clean and attractive appearance for the carnival when everything has to be disassembled and moved so often.

"We try to keep all the light bulbs burning," he said with a smile. "It's impossible, but we do try. And the couple of days off here gave us a chance to really wash down the equipment with pressure spray. Parents don't want their kids riding on dirty, beat-up rides that look like they are ready to fall apart, and I wouldn't want my kids to do it either."

Mike remembers how the shows first came to play Thief River Falls. "We were in Hallock and a group from the fair board here came over to see our operation," he said. "They were talking with my dad and I wasn't paying much attention when I noticed somebody by one of the tires of a truck. My first thought was that somebody was puncturing tires.

"So I asked the guy what he was doing, and he showed me a tire tread gauge and said he was measuring the tread wear on the tires. 'You must have a pretty good operation, judging by the way you keep your tires,' they guy told me. You never know what it takes to impress some people. If we had been running on bald tires, we may never have started playing Thief River Falls."

Asked if there is a lot of government regulation involved in the carnival business, Armstrong readily confirmed that there is. "It's terrible," he said. "Truck licenses have to be divided so every state you operate in gets a prorated share of the license fee. There are all kinds of regulations involved with the trucks, right down to each tire you use. And there are always inspectors of one sort or another who drop in unannounced to check the rides for safety or the food concessions for health conditions. And the insurance costs are terrific, not to mention interest. We have the same problems as a lot of businesses, we just move the business once or twice a week."

Armstrong was impressed with the grandstand program line-up which the fair board had arranged this year, noting that there should be something for everyone. "I think it's the best schedule since we've been coming here," he said.

And he added that the carnival has added a Paratrooper and Scrambler to its collection of rides, and has brought back the Ferris wheel this year. "We're looking for good weather and a good fair," he said. "With all the attractions, there should be a lot of people around. We're ready for 'em."

Flu Epidemic Dangers Engelstad Family Life

by Melvin Engelstad

The Flu Epidemic

When the flu epidemic swept the country (1918), Mathilde was called upon for advice and assistance in caring for the many neighbors who were seriously ill. The John Strobergs and Andrew Hestekinds were very distressed, with several patients in each home at the same time, and Mathilde was driven between the two families during the crisis. Two deaths resulted in the Hestekind family — Elling Hagen (Mrs. Hestekind's brother, who was employed on the farm) and the Hestekind baby, Norman.

A little later, Mathilde had the beds at her own home filled with flu victims. One hired man was not stricken, but the task of caring for all of the stock, milking the cows, filling bottles, and delivering milk was too great for any one individual to handle. Learning of the situation, a neighbor, S.O. Lee, was instrumental in having his adult son, Martin, go to Peder's farm each day to contribute his services until conditions improved.

To complicate matters even more, while Mathilde had her hands full nursing a houseful of patients, a malady had invaded the sheep herd, right at lambing time, and was taking a disastrous toll of lambs and ewes. Somehow, she managed to divide her time between the house and the old barn where the sheep now were sheltered. Almost as fast as they were born, however, the lambs would die — and often their mothers — so that the pile of frozen, dead sheep outside of the barn door continued to grow higher and wider, day after day.

In a desperate attempt to save those that were alive after birth, Mathilde discovered one night that she had 14 newborn lambs in the kitchen, where she was keeping them warm and feeding them cow's milk from a nippled bottle.

Formation of Stallion Association

A group of farmers formed a stallion association that operated successfully for several years (around 1920). There were 14 stockholders — Peder Engelstad, T.K. Roinestad, A.G. Loftness, John Nelson, Dennis Connelly, Henry Hansson, M. J. Berg, L.R. Muzzy, Ed A. Aubol, William Moeller, John Sundt, Ole Haraldson, Hans Skogstad and Math Barzen. Four of the colts raised on Peder's farm were Pearl, Chub, Barney and Birdie.

When draft horses were in demand for heavy hauling, farm work and city drayage, Percheron and Belgian stallions were owned by the association for breeding. With draft animals being gradually replaced by motorized equipment, however, the association became inactive as its aims and purposes grew less and less applicable to the changing requirements of industry and commerce.

Peder Becomes Agent for Austin Insurance Company

Always interested in the proection of his own property and crops, as well as in helping other farmers set up insurance programs to meet their needs, Peder, in 1921, became an agent for the Austin Insurance Company and represented this firm for 21 years writing farm casualty insurance.

Importance of Dairy Farming Being Recognized Statewide

A gesture of appreciation for the importance of dairy farming to the community was shown in 1923 when ten dairy farmers attended the Minnesota state fair and Northwest dairy show as guests of the Commercial Club. Packy MacFarland, garage owner and implement dealer, came out to the farm and asked Peder if he would be one of the guests of the club to attend the fair at its expense, and similar visits and invitations were made to each of the other farmers by club representatives.

In addition to the state fair and dairy show, their schedule included a tour of outstanding points of interest in Minneapolis, as well as visits to the state penitentiary at Stillwater and Woodend Guernsey Farms outside of the Twin Cities.

The delegation was composed of Peder, Hans Anton, Jens Kierk, Waldie Christensen, Hans Rude Joseph Kilen, Knute Yatesund, H. C. Woolson, F.B. Conklin and Stuart McLeod. Cuts made from pencil etchings of Peder, Kilen and Yatesund were used on the front page of the "Thief River Falls Tribune" of Sept. 12, 1923, accompanying the story of the visit to the state fair. On the second page of the same issue, there was a photo taken by a "St. Paul Pioneer Press" photographer that included the following men: Peder, Yatesund, M.A. Mattison, J.S. Arneson, Kilen and Stephen Arneson. The business community repeated this show of friendship and respect the next year, also when another delegation of farmers attended the state fair as guests of the Commercial Club.

Peder Is Crowned "Alfalfa King"

In 1924, Peder was singled out for the honor of being "Alfalfa King" and hailed by the community and leading newspapers of the state. An arch, made entirely of baled alfalfa hay, was erected in Thief River Falls spanning Third street at LaBree Avenue and bearing the title "Home of Alfalfa."

Speakers at the Alfalfa Day celebration on January 7, in the order of their appearance at the podium, were as follows: W.W. Prichard Jr., mayor of Thief River Falls; W. McCurdy, business manager of the "Winnipeg Tribune"; E.C. Leedy, general agricultural development agent of the Great Northern railway; A. Ellis, professor of field husbandry, University of Minnesota; Dr. F.J. Alway, soils department, University of Minnesota; J.G. Haney, district manager, International Harvester company; C.J. Selvig, president, Northwest School of Agriculture; Colonel Ralph Webb, mayor of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada; H.S. Funston, immigration agent, Soo Line railroad; F.E. Balmer, state county agent leader, State of Minnesota; and Ole Sageng, rural credit department, State of Minnesota.

A parody, sung to the tune of "Solomon Levi", had one verse devoted to Peder. His youngest son, who was a member of the Lincoln high school glee club, had the privilege of singing with the group as they saluted his father with these lines;

And there is Peder Engelstad
Of Pennington County,
The pioneer of alfalfa,
Of him we must take heed.
He raises Guernsey cattle
And feeds alfalfa hay,
Which makes the cream checks
Grow and swell,
And thereby saves the day.

The alfalfa arch was erected for a number of succeeding years, and it became an important attraction at the Red River Valley farm crop show at Crookston, Minnesota, a few years later. A great deal of publicity was given to the event throughout the state in the form of editorials and feature articles.

In the Dec. 28, 1924, issue of the "St. Paul Pioneer Press" — Sunday edition — a two-line, page-wide headline introduced Peder as "Covered Wagon Pioneer Turns Prairie Land Into Farm of 1,000 Acres by Applying Courage, Brains and Enterprise to His Opportunities"; the eight-column story then related an interesting summary of Peder's early pioneering days showing pictures of the alfalfa arch, city auditorium, Thief River creamery, and several of Peder's farm buildings.

The American Magazine Wants Peder's Story

William S. Dutton, editorial staff writer for "The American Magazine," phoned from the Evelyn hotel early one March morning in 1925 stating that the "St. Paul Dispatch" had furnished him with Peder's address for the purpose of an interview. Peder was occupied with other scheduled duties at Thief River Falls that day, but he invited Mr. Dutton to come out to the farm where his son Paul would be able to supply much of the information. Typical of Peder was his assurance to Mr. Dutton: "I will do as little as possible today and leave as much as possible for tomorrow, in order to have more time for the interview."

Peder reached home about mid-afternoon and found that his son had provided most of the general information needed by the magazine representative. The remainder of the afternoon and several hours after supper were then spent with Mr. Dutton giving him additional facts and personal observations, and it was after midnight when Paul drove him back to his hotel.

Seven months had gone by since that interview with Mr. Dutton for "The American Magazine." A photographer had been at the farm in June and had taken a number of pictures to accompany the story. There had been some correspondence with Mr. Dutton, and in the last letter Peder had been informed that the article would appear in the November issue. Late in October, copies of the next issue of the magazine were on the newsstands, and there was the story! It was replete with a full-page photograph of Peder, scenes of the farm buildings, and a picture of Peder and Mathilde surrounded by sons, daughters, in-laws and grandchildren. It was the feature story in this issue of a national publication with a circulation of 2,200,000 copies.

Peder's achievements were soon being hailed by letters and press notices from widely separated points in the United States and Canada. Many of these letters, appropriately enough, came from agricultural specialists, some from persons seeking advice and counsel on farm real estate, others from government officials, and many from acquaintances wishing to add their compliments.

O.H. Smith, commissioner, Minnesota State Board of Immigration, in the following excerpt from his letter, recognizes the very important part played by Mathilde: "I am not overlooking the fact that to achieve such wonderful success it is necessary to have an efficient helpmate and for that reason want to extend my congratulations to your excellent wife as well as yourself."

Answers from the Bible by Pastor Don Peres

Q. Why does a good God allow evil to exist?

A. One of the most haunting questions we face concerns the problem of evil. Why is there evil in the world if there is a God? Why isn't He doing something about it? Many assume that the existence of evil disproved the existence of God.

However the scriptures makes it plain that God did not create the world in the state in which it is now, (Isiah 45:18) but evil came as a result of the selfishness of man. (Genesis 3:1-24) The Bible says that God is a God of love (I John 4:8) and desired to create a person and eventually a race that would love Him. But genuine love cannot exist unless freely given through free choice, and thus man was given the choice to accept God's love or to reject it. (John 3:16)

When Adam and Eve disobeyed God, they did not choose something good that God had created, but, by their own choice, they brought evil into the world. God is neither evil nor did He create evil. Man brought evil upon himself by selfishly choosing his own way apart from God's way. (Proverbs 16:25, Isiah 53:6)

Although evil is here and it is real, it is also temporary. Evil will eventually be destroyed. (Revelations 20:10)

Christians are the only ones that have any hope or solutions to this world of evil. There is a new world coming for the person who has trusted Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour. (Revelations 21:5) God will right every wrong and put away evil once and for all, in His time.

Rev. 21:1 says, "and I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea."

Revelations 22:3 says, "and there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him."

DOT To Spend Record Amount On Highways

Minnesota department of transportation commissioner Richard Braun has announced that during the next two years Mn-DOT will spend more money than has ever been spent before for highway improvement projects throughout the state.

In all, a total of $380 million will be spent on the 1984-85 highway improvement program, 42 per cent more than was spent on the 1982-83 highway improvement program, 42 per cent more than was spent on the 1982-83 highway program. Braun made that announcement as he formally outlined what projects Mn-DOT plans on letting to contract during the next two years.

In making the announcement, Braun said, "Even with this record two-year program, we're still only going to meet about 10 per cent of Minnesota's major highway improvement needs."

He outlined some of the goods things the 1984-85 highway improvement program does, "including removal of the load restrictions on TH 59 between Erskine and Thief River Falls by strengthening the roadway to provide nine-ton year-round and 10-ton 10-month service." Similar work is scheduled for TH 53 between Virginia and International Falls which will result in the first modern two-land roadway between those communities. International Falls is the largest city in the state currently without nine-ton access.

Other examples of planned improvements include reconstruction of two narrow, aging and well-traveled highways — TH 15 between New Ulm and Winthrop and TH 212 between Dawson and Montevideo. Work towards making major improvements on TH 60 between Windom and Mountain Lake also will occur as will major construction of several segments of TH 169 in Mille Lacs county. In the Twin Cities metro area, plans call for work to begin on two bridges over the Mississippi, the bridge in the city of Wabasha and the High Bridge in St. Paul.

Another objective of the 1984-85 program is to provide for the safe and efficient movement of people and goods. According to Braun, "Although detours and construction zones will cause motorists some inconvenience, the long overdue improvements will help us meet that goal and start to move the state's roadways to a point where they will be a greater asset to the tourist and travel industry."

Asks National Access Symbol Of Handicapped

A resolution calling for uniform handicapped parking guidelines among the 50 states was introduced today by Senator Dave Durenberger.

The resolution encourages all 50 states to adopt the international wheelchair symbol of access for license plates, decals and parking signs and encourages the states to grant special parking privileges to vehicles displaying the wheelchair symbol on a license plate or decal.

"This action is necessary because many states use different symbols to designate a vehicle with a disabled driver or parking privileges for the disabled," he said. "Agreements of reciprocity should be developed to make travel between states for a handicapped person easier, ensuring fair treatment while making the job of a law enforcement officer easier."

Currently, over half the states offer handicapped parking privileges. Twenty-one states have reciprocity to the handicapped from other states. Minnesota uses the wheelchair as its symbol of access.

Senator Would Fight Natural Gas Decontrol

Senator Rudy Boschwitz today said he would fight any efforts to decontrol "old" natural gas.

In a letter to energy committee chairman James McClure of Idaho, Boschwitz argued that any efforts to decontrol old gas could end up in a net increase in prices for natural gas.

"When you consider that some Minnesotans faced increases of between 20 and 60 per cent last year, any idea that gambles with those prices going up is simply unacceptable," Boschwitz said.

The energy committee is currently making up the Reagan administration's proposal to decontrol all prices for natural gas by 1986.

This seeks to modify the natural gas policy act of 1978 (NGPA) which provided for the phasing out of price controls by 1985 on "new" gas, that is, gas found after April of 1977.

The act left controls on old gas, or gas found before April of 1977. Proponents of total gas decontrol contend that the pricing system established by the NGPA has distorted the market by encouraging production of high-priced new natural gas which is too expensive to market in today's economic environment.

Further, it is argued that the NGPA has discouraged the production of lower-cost old gas. With decontrol, proponents believe that old gas prices will rise and new gas prices will fall, thus removing the current market distortions.

Boschwitz said he is concerned that there is no "universal agreement" on that thinking and that "Congress should not be toying with untested ideas that could literally leave many Minnesotans out in the cold."

Boschwitz cited recent studies by the energy information administration and the citizens labor energy coalition that indicate total decontrol would cause old gas prices to rise more than new prices fall.

"The resulting average market price would therefore be greater than the current prices," he said, "which would have a very harmful effect on natural gas consumers in our states, like Minnesota, which rely on "old" gas.

"We have to be very careful on this," Boschwitz added. "Last winter we were lucky that the temperatures were relatively mild. We can't count on that again."

ADULT TRICYCLE RACES were held Saturday as part of the outdoor activities during Best Western Inn's anniversary celebration. Participants soon learned that what was easy as a kid can be very difficult once you outgrow the toys. This picture sequence of a "grudge match" between Margaret Peterson of the Times and Linda Reierson of radio station KKAQ demonstrates that it can be hard enough just staying on a tricycle, let alone getting it to the finish line. Although the trikes were brand new when the races began, the twisted frames which are obvious in the bottom photo, show that they just weren't made to carry the kind of loads which a succession of racers (not all as lightweight as the ladies) placed on them. After trying nearly every contortion possible that would allow them to pedal with their feet, most of the contestants finally resorted to kneeling and pedaling with their hands in order to cross the finish line. One of the closest races of the day, this one was won by Margaret.

Marx Presents Research On Dairy Feeds

At the recent American dairy science association meetings held at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Dr. George D. Marx presented research conducted at the northwest experiment station, Crookston. There were 1,588 dairy scientists in attendance from the USA, Canada, and several foreign countries. A total of 421 research papers were presented along with current symposia topics.

Paper presented by Dr. Marx was entitled, "Performance of Calves on High-Moisture Barley and High-Moisture Corn Starter Grain." This scientific paper involved studies using dairy calves, both replacement Holstein heifers and dairy males. The objective of the research was to determine the value of feeding moist grain as compared to the conventional dry grain. Barley and corn were the grains utilized and are common feedstuffs for calves; however, very little research has ever been published on feeding this material at high-moisture levels.

Results of this experiment indicated that high-moisture grain can replace the conventional starter grain for calves if the ration is balanced for mineral, vitamins and protein. Satisfactory gains and growth rates were obtained for both replacement heifers and steer calves. The grain part of the ration was supplemented with four quarts of milk the first four weeks of the calf's life, and after weaning from milk the diet was supplemented with alfalfa haylage to appetite.

The high-moisture grain did not ccause any unusual calf health nor nutritional problems. No palatability or intake problems were observed and animals readily consumed the high-moisture grain ration. In the future, high-moisture grain use for feeding will become more economically important. This moist grain can be ensiled and does not require artificial drying after harvest which will save a tremendous amount of heat energy.

Dr. Marx was also co-author on three other scientific paper presentations at these meetings. The first involved a joint project with Dr. C. S. Park of North Dakota state university, Fargo, on the "Influence of Dietary Protein on Cholesterol and related Metabolites in Growing Dairy Animals." Another involved the long-term project of breeding large and small dairy cows, namely, "The Effects of Selection for Body Size on Feed Efficiency in Dairy Cattle", co-authored with Dr. Charles Young and Robert Yerex of the University of Minnesota, St. Paul. The last paper involved a study on "A Three-Lactation Evaluation of Bicarbonate of Soda Supplementation for High Producing Cows", jointly authored with Dr. John Donker of the animal science department of the University of Minnesota.

Property Loss Can Be Taken On Tax Return

Loss of personal property, such as from an accident or natural disaster, can be very upsetting. For those who have experienced a loss this year, there is a bit of consoling news from C.D. Switzer, director of the IRS in Minnesota. Many of these losses can be taken as itemized deductions on tax returns.

For a casualty loss to be deductible on Form 1040, certain conditions must exist. The law says a casualty is the complete or partial destruction or loss of property that was the result of an identifiable event that was sudden, unexpected or unusual in nature.

For example, if there is a storm that sends a tree branch through a picture window, it could qualify for a casualty loss deduction. If the homeowner neglects to properly putty the window, and one day the glass falls out, that is not a casualty loss for tax purposes.

Persons who have suffered casualty losses, particularly those involving extensive damage to real or personal property, should work as quickly as possible to make a list of items lost or damaged, including the estimated value of each item. Before and after pictures can be a great help in reconstructing the loss and helping to refresh memory at tax time.

If the damaged property was insured, a taxpayer may claim only the amount over and above what was reimbursed, or is expected to be reimbursed, by the insurance company. If for some reason a claim is not made to an insurance company, the amount of your casualty loss is still limited to the difference between what the insurance company would have paid and the actual dollar amount of the loss.

The deduction for a casualty loss to a home that is not covered by insurance is, in general terms, the lesser of two figures. First learn the decrease in the fair market value of the home. Compare that figure to the adjusted basis of the home. The smaller of these two figures is the one to use to figure the actual deductible casualty loss figure on the 1983 tax return. The first $100 of the casualty loss is not deductible and a recent law change further limits the deduction to the amount over 10 per cent of adjusted gross income.

In a hypothetical situation, here is the needed information and how to calculate the casualty loss.

A homeowner has an adjusted gross income of $30,000. The home, which cost $84,000 including land, was partially damaged by a wind storm in July. The value of the property (both land and building) immediately before the storm was $70,000 and its value immediately after the storm was $60,000. The homeowner collected $5,000 from the insurance company for the damage to the home.

Casualty loss deduction from the storm is $1,900. This results from the $100 deductible and 10 per cent of adjusted gross income ($3,000) subtracted from the $5,000 damage not recovered.

Two free booklets from IRS have more details and examples on this part of the tax law. Publication 537 has tax information on disasters, casualties and thefts. Publication 584 is a workbook on figuring a loss. To order either of these, or for more answers to federal tax questions, call the IRS toll-free at 1-800-424-1040. Trained people are on hand Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. to assist callers.

Action Rally Seeks Support For Farmers

Farmers and business people in the northwestern region of the state will hold an "Emergency Action Rally" at 9 a.m. Friday at the Kiehle auditorium, University of Minnesota, Crookston to discuss mounting problems following designation of three counties as disaster areas last year and the possibility of more disaster designations this year, with no disaster aid forthcoming.

Minnesota's Senator Rudy Boschwitz and Seventh District Congressman Arlan Stangeland have accepted invitations to attend the rally. The entire Minnesota Congressional delegation has been invited to attend, as well as U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block or his representative, state agriculture commissioner Jim Nichols, state Farmers Home administration director Russ Bjorhus, Farm Credit Banks of St. Paul chief executive officer Burgee Amdahl, and state legislators from the entire area.

The rally will include testimony from farmers, members of the clergy and members of the business community about the loss of credit and poor economic situation that has resulted from successive years of adverse weather, inadequate farm income and extremely slow action of FmHA on necessary disaster claims.

"Something has to be done immediately to save these farms," stated Willard Brunelle, Crookston area farmer who is organizing the rally. "Farmers are jeopardized not only by FmHA, but by conventional lenders as well as the struggle to meet fertilizer and other costs. As members of the rural community, we are concerned about saving our local cooperatives and businesses. We want credit to be opened up again so we can do that and so we can purchase fuel and other needs to be able to harvest our crops this fall."

At a meeting earlier this month, a group of approximately 40 farmers and business people decided to hold the rally and ask Congress to direct FmHA to act on the problem.

Problems have been mounting since Marshall, Pennington and Red Lake counties were declared disaster areas in 1982. Claims for disaster aid were filed with FmHA as long as three months ago, but many farmers still await the outcome. Without disaster payments or money from last year's crops (in many cases harvest was impossible because of damage from heavy rain or standing water), farmers are left with bills for this season's input as well as previous costs.

"In some cases, conventional credit sources are drying up because of FmHA's failure to act," Brunelle said.

Farmers attending the rally will have an opportunity to ask questions and to ask for a response from the special invited guests. All members of the rural communities — both businessmen and farmers — are invited to attend.

Members of the emergency action rally committee in addition to Brunelle are Norman Eidenschink, Crookston; Sam Genereux, Thief River Falls; Norma Hanson, Goodridge; Earl Miller, Thief River Falls; Dave Steuart and Vern Wavra, Red Lake Falls.

Social Security Men Here Tues.

Ted Hoversten and Neil Rowe, field representatives of the Grand Forks social security office will be in Thief River Falls at the city auditorium on Tuesday from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

In 1981 the average American consumed 321 pounds of milk, 19.6 pounds of cheese, 17.5 pounds of ice cream, four pounds of butter and 4.3 pounds of cottage cheese.

Rep. Gramm To Address Dinner For Stangeland

After addressing a fund-raising luncheon for Congressman Arlan Stangeland next Friday, Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas will meet with area Republican leaders, including North Dakota Republican national committeeman Ben Clayburgh and Minnesota Independent - Republican chairman Leon Oistad, to discuss strategies for luring conservative Democratic votes away from increasingly liberal Democratic candidates.

Gramm will address the fund-raising luncheon at the Westward Ho restaurant in Grand Forks at noon. Tickets are $50 per person and in Pennington county are available from Ev Ault, Thief River Falls.

Gramm gained national attention when House Democratic leaders stripped him of his budget committee seat last January because of his conservative legislative record. He resigned from Congress and was re-elected as the first Republican to ever serve the Sixth Congressional district of Texas.

Paul Bunyan Festival Set At Brainerd

First Paul Bunyan festival takes place September 23 to 25, at Brainerd International raceway. Over 10,000 people are expected to visit the central Minnesota site during the three day event.

Theme is the 1800's but the diversity of activities challenges the imagination. From professional log rolling to hot air balloon races, there is enough entertainment to occupy the entire family.

Service organizations and private individuals have been planning the details for the Paul Bunyan festival for over a year. Hundreds of volunteers, paid performers and exhibitors are finalizing details for costumes and booth decor, in hopes of making this event one of the state's most exciting ongoing attractions.

There will be music, art, crafts, food, competitions, demonstrations, performances, games and audience involvement fun. Gate admission allows entrance to all activities (except concession purchases and special events such as competitions). Camping will be available. Communities surrounding Brainerd and establishments within the city limit, are finalizing details on special activities to be held in conjunction with the festival.

Doctor(s) Langland . . .

Husband-Wife On Clinic Staff

Dr. James and Dr. Penny Langland, a husband and wife team from Minneapolis, have joined the staff of the Falls Clinic professional association in Thief River Falls, according to business manager Arnold Carriere.

Dr. Penny Langland will practice in her specialty of family practice and Dr. James Langland will be in family practice and internal medicine. Penny will be eligible to take her family practice specialty board examinations after July 31 and James plans to take his internal medicine qualifying examination September 15.

Dr. James Langland was born in Minneapolis but moved with his family to California, graduating from high school in San Diego where he played basketball and tennis. He earned a BS degree from the college of biological science at the University of Minnesota in June of 1974 and graduated from the University of California, San Diego, School of medicine at LaJolla, CA, in June of 1978.

He did his internship in family practice at Fairview-St. Mary's hospital in Minneapolis from July of 1978 through June of 1979 and had residencies at Fairview-St. Mary's and at Abbot-Northwestern hospitals in Minneapolis, completing the latter in June of this year.

Penny Langland is a native of St. Paul and holds a BS degree from the agriculture department of the University of Minnesota in St. Paul. Her mother is originally from the Fargo, ND, area and her father from Hallock. Her MD degree is from the University of Minnesota medical school in June of 1980.

Her internship from June of 1980 to June of 1981 was at Fairview-St. Mary's hospital in Minneapolis and her family practice residency was from June of 1980 to July of 1983 at Smiley's Point clinic in Minneapolis.

Penny said she introduced James to winter sports such as cross-country skiing and winter camping and they enjoy that type of activity a great deal. He was at Northwestern hospital in February three years ago for a rural residency, liked the hospital, clinic and community, and with his wife decided to locate here. They have purchased a house on Oakland Park road where they live with their three-month-old son Mike.

Both doctors enjoy marathon running and plan to compete in the run being planned by the Jaycees for their summerfest program. They run several times a week and have entered a number of marathons previously, competing more for the experience and camaraderie than the expectation of high finishes. They also enjoy backpacking and canoeing among outdoor activities.

As the first female doctor in Thief River Falls, Penny says she has been well received and doesn't feel she has been discriminated against. Her special interests in obstetrics and pediatrics are expected to bring her into greater contact with women patients who often may feel more comfortable visiting a female physician.

DOCTORS LANGLAND, James and his wife Penny, have joined the medical staff of the Falls Clinic professional association in Thief River Falls. Penny is the first female general practitioner for the Thief River Falls community and her husband expects to work primarily in internal medicine. They mutually enjoy outdoor activities such as camping, backpacking, canoeing and running.

Barley Seeded On 950,000 Acres In 1983

Minnesota farmers planted an estimated 950,000 acres of barley in 1983, according to the Minnesota agricultural statistics service. This year's acreage is six per cent above that planted in 1982 but 10 per cent below the 1981 acreage. Acreage planted in the major growing districts is estimated at 760,000 for the northwest and 161,500 for the west central. The remaining 28,500 acres are scattered throughout the rest of the state.

Even though the winter was warmer and drier than normal, a cool spring caused barley planting to be delayed about one week. In the major barley growing districts, planting did not begin until the 20th of April. However, planting progressed rapidly and reached two-thirds point by May 10. Seeding was nearly complete by the end of May, which is about a week ahead of normal.

Soil moisture varied greatly in the major barley growing areas during the spring. The northern Red River Valley had surplus moisture during most of the spring while the west central area of the state reported a continued shortage of rainfall. The overall cool and wet spring has helped the barley crop and prospects for a good crop are high.

An estimated 93 per cent of Minnesota's barley acreage was seeded to varieties recommended for malting by the Malting Barley Improvement association. Morex remains the leading variety while Glenn continues to increase in popularity. Larker and Manker, the number three and four varieties, continue to decline.

Morex was seeded on 59 per cent (565,000 acres) of Minnesota's barley acreage in 1983. Last year, 67 per cent of the acreage was in Morex. A breakdown by districts shows 53 per cent of the acreage in the northwest and 69 per cent in the west central district was seeded to Morex.

Acreage planted to Glenn increased sharply from 183,000 in 1982 to 309,000 in 1983. Glenn gained all of its increase in the northwest district while losing acreage in the rest of the state. Acreage seeded to Glenn in the northwest changed from 25 per cent in 1982 to 39 per cent in 1983. Glenn decreased in the west central district from six per cent to five per cent of the acreage and in the rest of the state from 21 per cent to 16 per cent of the seeded acres.

Combined acreage of Larker and Manker, once major varieties, continued to decrease with just three per cent of the acreage (or 22,000 acres) compared with six per cent (or 54,000 acres) in 1982. The major variety not recommended for malting by the Malting Barley Improvement association is again Bumper. An estimated three per cent (25,000 acres) of the state's acreage was seeded to Bumper — about the same as last year. Most of the Bumper variety was seeded in the northwest district.

Other and unknown varieties total one per cent of the acreage in 1983 compared with four per cent in 1982. Included in other varieties are Bonanza and Conquest which are recommended for malting. The most promising new variety to come along is Robust. Robust was seeded on an estimated two per cent of the Minnesota acreage this year.

Persistent Pain May Be Caused By Fibrositis

At one time or another most people have aches and pains that come and go. But when pain and stiffness don't go away, the arthritis foundation says it's time to get some medical attention. There are several possible explanations for these complaints, an arthritis foundation spokesman observed. One of them might be fibrositis.

Fibrositis is a condition where there is pain in the ligaments, tendos, and muscles. While it can be quite painful, fibrositis doesn't cripple or cause severe disability. What seems to happen, according to the arthritis foundation, is that the muscles become too tight and stay that way for too long.

Anyone can get fibrositis, but it seems to affect women more frequently than men. Most people who get it are between 25 and 60.

Arthritis foundation has a message on fibrositis that may be heard by calling the foundation's toll-free number, 1-800-552-1278. A new leaflet on fibrositis is available free to callers. The foundation will also provide answers to other questions about arthritis.

'U'M Regents Approve Merit Base Salaries

Plan by the University of Minnesota administration for spending $366 million, for operations and maintenance in 1983-84 was approved unanimously by the university board of regents July 8.

Despite the unanimous approval, one element of the plan — the distribution of faculty salaries based solely on merit — was the center of debate by the regents. The plan, which is based on a legislative appropriation of $247 million and tuition income of $77.3 million, includes a six per cent increase in faculty salaries and an average tuition increase of 15.9 per cent.

Disbursement of the faculty salary hike will be based solely on merit, a plan that some regents fear could hurt younger faculty members, as well as women and minorities.

Regent Mary Schertler, who opposed the administration's proposal for allocating the increase, submitted a resolution calling for the six per cent to be distributed through a combination of cost-of-living increases (2.4 per cent) and merit pay (3.6 per cent). Motion was defeated 9 to 3 with Regents Charles McGuiggan and David Roe supporting Schertler's plan.

Under the plan approved Friday, pay increases will be funneled to department heads, who will decide how much each faculty member will receive. The board has called for a full report of how the money is distributed.

University President C. Peter Magrath said the administration will be watching for aberrations in the appropriations — faculty members who get no increases or those who get extraordinary increases. He said he expects 97 per cent of all the faculty to get some increase.

Regent David Lebedoff supported the administration plan, saying that without merit increases it would be difficult to attract and retain the talented younger faculty necessary to keep the university strong academically. "There's a point at which you are going to assign yourself to being a second-rate institution," Lebedoff said. "I'm convinced that the younger people on the faculty would be far better served under this proposal," Lebedoff said.

Kenneth Keller, vice president for academic affairs, said that during the past eight years when salary increases have been distributed through a combination of cost-of-living and merit, average increases for junior faculty members have been greater than for senior faculty. "Junior faculty are statistically very likely to benefit (under the merit plan)," he said.

Tuition increase, part of a four-year plan to have all students pay the same portion of instructional costs, will bring the annual cost for all freshmen and sophomores to $1,414 — 9.5 per cent more than the cost this year. Upper division students in the college of liberal arts, the university's largest unit, will pay $1,455 per year — 11.7 per cent more.

Magrath told the board that the implementation of the cost-related tuition plan will be studied closely. "We do want to assess what the impact of this move is, whether it is truly beneficial, how it truly affects students — we aren't going to know that right away," he said.

Board will meet in August to approve the comprehensive budget, which will cover the operations and maintenance budget and all other sources of income.

In other action, the board voted to allow chairman Lauris Krenik and vice chairman McGuiggan to act for the board in contract negotiations between the university and Midwest Communications for cablecasting of sports events and educational programs. Negotiations are expected to be concluded by early August.

Mary Des Roches, associate vice president for finance and operations, was elected university treasurer, replacing Frederick Bohen, who has resigned as finance vice president and treasurer to accept a position at Brown University in Rhode Island.

Krenik also announced changes in the board of regents committee designations. Schertler will head the reorganized committee for faculty, staff and student concerns; McGuiggan will head the educational policy and long-range planning committee; Lebedoff will head the physical plant and investments committee; and Verne Long will head the newly created budget and audit committee.

Council rules On Stillwater Gazette Case

Minnesota news council narrowly rejected a Stillwater resident's complaint that the Stillwater Evening Gazette should have covered a pro-nuclear freeze march held in Stillwater on March 5.

Scott Shely, an anti-nuclear activist whose Stillwater-based group, "Concerned Citizens for a Nuclear Free World," co-sponsored the event, alleged that the Gazette did not cover the march because the paper's publisher, John Easton, is opposed to the freeze movement. Shely also complained that the Gazette in an editorial unfairly maligned freeze proponents, mishandled its letters to the editor, and distorted news about the Stillwater city council's consideration of a freeze resolution.

In rejecting Shely's complaint about the Gazette's failure to cover the march, the majority (seven) of the 13 council members who reviewed the case found that because the paper had covered the freeze issue before and after the march, there was no clear evidence of editorial bias in the paper's decision not to cover "this one event."

"Countless special interest groups seek to popularize issues by staging events for the benefit of TV cameras and the print media," the majority said. "These groups are clearly entitled to seek media attention, but they cannot always expect it as a matter of right."

Majority reiterated the council's long-standing view that, "news media editors must have wide discretion to determine what stories to report on and how to report on them, provided their decisions are unbiased and made in good faith."

Six dissenting members argued that the Gazette, "exercised poor news judgment in failing to cover the march." Noting that 50 to 100 people had attended, that nothing like it had happened in Stillwater in at least the past five years, and that approximately 500 people in Washington county had recently signed a petition in favor of a freeze resolution that was under consideration by both the Stillwater city council and the Washington county board, the minority said the march was, "clearly a matter of significant local interest. With the current debate over the freeze issue, at the national and local levels the Gazette would have done well to cover the march and let its readers decide the merits for themselves."

All 13 council members did, however, vote to accept Shely's complaint that the Gazette inaccurately implied in a March 16 news story on the Stillwater city council's consideration of the freeze resolution that because the city council decided not to vote on the resolution, the freeze movement was dead in Stillwater.

"It was and is clear that the nuclear freeze movement is not dead in Stillwater," the council said. "The refusal of the city council to act on the resolution is only one small phase in the active freeze movement."

In addition, six council members found that the headline for the March 16 story was equally misleading.

All 13 council members voted to reject Shely's claim that the Gazette had maligned local freeze proponents in an editorial that appeared the day after the march, stating that the freeze movement ran the risk of aligning itself too closely with the radical left in America. "The newspaper is entitled to express whatever opinions it likes in an editorial, as long as those opinions are anchored in facts," the council said. "In this case, the paper did not go beyond the facts."

Council divided again over Shely's charge that the Gazette denied freeze proponents fair access to its letters column to respond to the Gazette's editorial the day after the march, and unfairly attached editor's notes to two pro-freeze letters it did publish, including one that was in response to the editorial.

Seven members concluded that the paper did not, "overstep the proper bounds of professionalism, either in the number of letters it published in response to the paper's editorial or in the editor's notes it attached to the letters. Whether an editor chooses to respond to letters with editor's notes, editorials or signed opinion pieces is up to the individual taste and judgment of the editor," the majority said.

However, the six dissenting members concluded that it was not possible to determine how many letters had been submitted in response to the editorial. The six members also said that they felt if was, "unprofessional for editors to chide readers or to lecture them in such a format as a note appended to readers' letters."

Minnesota News council is an independent nonprofit group whose volunteer members hear and evaluate complaints against the news media in Minnesota. Its informal determinations are publicized throughout the state.

Rule Protects Handicapped Infants' Rights

Health and human services (HHS) department secretary Margaret M. Heckler announced recently that her department is issuing a proposed rule protecting handicapped infants from discriminatory denial of food or medical treatment solely on the basis of a handicap.

Rule embodies the concept of the interim final rule published by HHS on March 7, and has several important modividations.

"For too long, our society ignored the rights and needs of the handicapped. As we enter the 'decade of disabled persons,' now that we've finally become more sentitive and responsive to older handicapped persons, how can we tolerate the denial of those same rights to handicapped infants?" Secretary Hecker said.

"Within each and every child there is something unique. How much poorer in spirit would be if basic sustenance had been denied at birth to the many handicapped persons who today lead productive lives? How much would have been lost?"

"Our civil rights laws and our most fundamental principales declare that no persons should be denied sustenance and appropriate medical care simply because he or she has been born into this world with a handicap."

Under the proposed rule, all hospitals receiving federal funds would be required to post a notice at nurses stations in areas where infants are cared for, rather than in public places, stating that Section 504 of the Rehabilitation act of 1973 prohibits discrimination on the basis of handicap. The notice would include, in addition to a toll-free number at HHS to which alleged violations of the law could be reported, the phone number of the appropriate state agency in order to involve the state child protective services agencies in such cases. The proposed rule includes a preamble and appendix explaining the scope and intent of the regulation with specific examples of appropriate and inappropriate application of regulation to qualified infants.

Upon receiving a report of an alleged violation, HHS's office for civil rights would investigate the case.

TRF Team In State Meet

Good luck wishes go out today to the Thief River Falls Babe Ruth Prep team for 13-year-olds as they prepare for the 1983 state Babe Ruth Prep tournament at St. Louis Park.

An 11-team, double-elimination affair, the week-long tournament starts Saturday, with Thief River Falls taking the field Sunday at 4 p.m. Next start for the local squad won't be until the following Tuesday.

Thief River Falls' 13-year-olds own an impressive 28-1 record following their state tournament-qualifying District 7 championship finish at East Grand Forks over the weekend.

Only loss this summer for the Thief River Falls squad came at the hands of host Warroad by an unlikely score of 26-6 in the finals of an invitational tournament back on June 18-19. They later beat that same Warroad team four times, including an 11-1 and 14-4 doubleheader decision here July 7.

Coach Doug Henke and his team have enjoyed a tremendously successful season. They are to be congratulated. They feel they can be competitive at the state tournament level, and we wish them the best of luck.

Legion Completes Schedule

Thief River Falls American Legion baseball team closes out its 1983 Northwest League schedule with games at Roseau tonight (Wednesday) and at Crookston Thursday. Both have 7 p.m. starting times.

A pair of wins could lift Thief River Falls atop the league standings. Thief River Falls is 7-3 in Northwest League play right now, including a 7-1 win over Roseau a week ago. Thief River Falls hasn't faced Crookston since the second game of the season — a 6-2 Crookston victory on the fairgrounds diamond here.

Crookston, after struggling early in the year, swept Roseau 10-1 and 4-2 Saturday to extend a seven-game winning streak that has improved the team's record to 12-7-1. Left-hander Craig Stahlecker pitched a two-hitter in the 10-1 first-game victory, striking out 10 and walking four.

Thief River Falls ends its regular season schedule Saturday with a 1 p.m. doubleheader at Fergus Falls.

Six-team, double-elimination Ninth District Class AA American Legion baseball tournament will be played July 28-31 at Moorhead. Thief River Falls, East Grand Forks, Crookston, Moorhead, Detroit Lakes and Fergus Falls will be involved in that one, while the rest of the Ninth District field will be competing in an eight-team, double-elimination Class A tournament at Battle Lake.

TRF Shooters Is Selected

Karl Bjorkman of Thief River Falls has been selected by the national training team directors as one of the nation's most aspiring young shooters and will attend the National Rifle Association's 1983 National Junior Olympic shooting camp program August 22-September 4 at Colorado Springs, Colo.

Bjorkman, 19, will participate in 15-hour training days in the trap shooting discipline, according to a NRA release. Athletes participating in the camp will be trained by nationally-recognized shooting coaches, many of whom are Olympic medalists.

Firing, on-line coaching, guest lectures and visual aids will be incorporated into the two-week program.

National Junior Olympic shooting camp program, currently in its fifth year, is co-sponsored by the National Rifle Association and the United States Olympic Committee. The program offers instruction in the five Olympic shooting disciplines of pistol, rifle, running game target, skeet and trap.

Participants stay at the United States Olympic Committee's National Training Center where the U.S.O.C. provides free room and board, offering shooters to develop their skills and associate with other potential Olympic contenders in other various sports.

Miscellaneous

+ Wadena's high school athletic teams will go from Region 8AA to class A next year, but the school has petitioned the Minnesota State High School League to remain Class AA in wrestling only. The reason: there are only 12 wrestling teams in Region 8AA compared to 36 in the Class A ranks.

MEMBERS OF THE state tournament-bound Thief River Falls Babe Ruth Prep baseball team for 13-year-olds listened as coach Doug Henke addressed the squad during a Tuesday practice session at the fairgrounds baseball diamond. The District 7 champion Thief River Falls squad will take an impressive 28-1 record into the 11-team, double-elimination state tournament at St. Louis Park beginning this weekend.

TRF 13-Year-Olds Own 28-1 Record . . .

Babe Ruth Prep Team Has State Aspirations

Thief River Falls' Babe Ruth Prep baseball team for 13-year-olds has had an outstanding season, compiling an enviable 28-1 record, winning a post-season District 7 tournament title and earning a berth in the 1983 state Babe Ruth Prep tournament beginning this weekend in St. Louis Park, a Twin Cities suburb.

But coach Doug Henke's team isn't satisfied yet. They want more. They have their sights set on a state tournament title and a spot in the Midwest Regionals at Scottsbluff, Neb.

And Henke figures those are obtainable goals. "As far as we know, we think we can go down there and win it," explained Henke. "We're not going down there just for a vacation."

Ron Novak, Thief River Falls youth program director has seen other Thief River Falls 13-year-olds play in the state tournament, and based upon the talent he watched in those events, he feels the current Thief River Falls ball club can be competitive at the state level.

An 11-team, double-elimination tournament, the event begins its week-long run Saturday. Thief River Falls will make its first appearance Sunday at 4 p.m. against an as-of-yet unnamed opponent. Thief River Falls' second game won't be played until Tuesday — 10 a.m. if they are in the loser's bracket or 6 p.m. if they are in the winner's bracket.

Opening game line-up and batting order, said Henke, will probably include shortstop Chris Bjorgaard, first baseman Kent Hamre, catcher Mike Bendickson, third baseman Billy Dicken, pitcher Chris Nelson, second baseman Mike Anderson, centerfielder John Mattson, either Jason Lane or Scott Vedbraaten in right field and leftfielder Dane Jones.

Kurt Dupree is the team's second starting pitcher and will alternate games with Nelson. Other members of the team include John Azure, Joel Swanson, Jim Kappes and Jason Haugen.

"Four wins and we're state champions — Nelson twice and Dupree twice," visioned Henke, who figures the team can play better than it did in winning the District 7 tournament with wins over Roseau 8-1, Crookston 7-0 and Roseau 13-7 in the finals of the five-team, double-elimination event at East Grand Forks. They weren't challenged in the first two starts and their play wasn't sharp, he acknowledged. When Roseau threatened to pull off a championship game upset, the Thief River Falls players responded and took charge in the late innings.

"These guys have battled back all year long when we needed it," explained Henke. "We've always had somebody come through for us when we really needed it."

Babe Ruth A Team Gains Berth In District Playoffs

Bouncing back from a first-round loss, Thief River Falls Babe Ruth A team finished as the number two finisher in the South Half Lake Agassiz Sub-District baseball tournament for 14-15-year-olds to earn a spot in the state tournament-qualifying Lake Agassiz District 7 tournament this weekend at Warroad.

Sub-district play was held at Crookston Monday and Tuesday. In the first round of the four-team, double-elimination tournament, East Grand Forks defeated Thief River Falls 4-2 and Red Lake Falls edged Crookston 2-1.

Red Lake Falls then secured the South Half No. 1 seed at the District 7 level by beating East Grand Forks 5-4 in a match-up of first round winners while Thief River Falls stayed alive with a 28-2 pounding of Crookston in the loser's bracket.

Thief River Falls edged East Grand Forks 3-2 for the South Half No. 2 District 7 tournament spot.

Games are scheduled Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Lake Agassiz District 7 Babe Ruth tournament at Warroad. First round pairings match Thief River Falls against North Half No. 1 seed Roseau and Red Lake Falls against North Half No. 2 seed Williams. Thief River Falls, coached by Mark Harder, is 22-7 for the year.

Winner moves on to state tournament play later this month.

EGF 4, TRF 2

East Grand Forks, twice a Thief River Falls victim in late-season encounters, put Thief River Falls in a hole by posting a 4-2 first-round tournament win Monday.

Both sides had six hits. Rich Bendickson (3-for-4) and Marty Levin (2-for-3) had five of the six Thief River Falls hits.

Thief River Falls scored first, getting one in the third inning when Lee Hamre walked, stole second and Levin came through with a two-out RBI single.

East Grand Forks got two in the bottom of the third on two hits and three walks. Eight East Grand Forks batters came to the plate, but the winners left the bases loaded.

Tom Knoff, who was the game's losing pitcher, tripled in the fifth and scored on a single by Levin for a 2-2 tie, but East Grand Forks won it with a run in the sixth as Garret Hjelle singled, stole second and scored on a two-out single by lead-off batter Troy Asmus, ending a 12-game Thief River Falls winning streak.

TRF 28, Crookston 2

Thief River Falls' bats, quiet in the first-game loss to East Grand Forks, exploded in a loser's bracket game Monday afternoon against Crookston, banging out 21 hits in a 28-2 rout.

Winning pitcher Jeff Anderson, who checked Crookston on four hits, led the offensive assault with a perfect 6-for-6 game at the plate in the lead-off spot. Rich Bendickson, Lee Hamre and Tom Knoff all had three hits apiece while Marty Levin and Kevin Nelson had two each. Nelson and Hamre had five RBI's apiece, with Hamre legging out an inside-the-park home run.

Thief River Falls, owning an 8-2 lead at the time, had a 14-run fifth inning.

TRF 3, EGF 2

Winning run crossed the plate in the bottom of the sixth inning as Thief River Falls edged East Grand Forks 3-2 Tuesday for a District 7 tournament berth.

East Grand Forks scored single runs in the first and sixth innings to offset a two-run Thief River Falls second inning when Jeff Anderson and Rich Bendickson led off with back-to-back singles and scored on a two-out single by Marty Levin.

In the bottom of the sixth, Tom Knoff reached base on an inning-opening infield error, stole second and later scored on a two-out roller down the third base line by Kevin Nelson. The ball was allowed to roll by East Grand Forks with hopes it would go foul, but instead it hit the bag for a fair ball and a game-winning RBI single.

Both teams were limited to four hits. Dave Onkka was the winning pitcher.

TRF Wins 11-5 Game . . .

Legion Beats Detroit Lakes

A seven-run fourth inning sparked Thief River Falls to an 11-5 Class AA Ninth District American Legion baseball win at Detroit Lakes Tuesday, improving the winner's record to 19-6 for the year.

There were four consecutive singles by Jim Hallamek, Kirk Jenson, Al Ness and Ryan Drees to open the Thief River Falls fourth, followed by a walk issued to Gary Cornell, a double by Kerry Wollin and a single by Tim Nyland before an out was recorded.

Thief River Falls added four more runs to the total in the fifth on singles by Ness and Wollin, a walk given to Nyland, an error and a two-run double by Tim Bottem.

Bottem, Hallamek, Ness and Wollin ended up with two hits apiece as the winners collected 12 base hits. Nyland and Wollin combined on a six-hit, 12-strikeout performance on the mound.

Thief River Falls is scheduled to play 7 p.m. Northwest League games at Roseau tonight (Wednesday) and at Crookston Thursday before finishing the regular season schedule with a 1 p.m. doubleheader at Fergus Falls Saturday.

National Wildlife Federation News Release

How do animals beat the heat?

By doing anything from wallowing in mud to climbing a tree, according to this month's issue of Ranger Rick, the children's publication of the National Wildlife Federation.

What the temperature soars and the sun sizzles, here's how some animals keep their cool:

+ White rhino wallows in mud until its body is coated, and then cools off as the water in the mud evaporates.

+ By climbing a tree, the brown bear cub is cooled by the passing breezes, which also blow away black flies and mosquitoes that add to the misery of summer's heat.

+ Snoozing on the beach in the hot sun, the elephant seal stays cool as it molts, or loses patches of hair and skin. It then protects and cools its tender new skin by flipping damp sand all over its body.

Ask Comment On Projects In Wildlife Areas

Red Lake watershed district has invited public comment on two minor projects on the Elm Lake and Reiner wildlife management areas in Marshall and Pennington counties.

The department of natural resources proposes to develop three to five dugouts for waterfowl on each of the management areas to increase waterfowl production and provide additional open water hunting sites. The dugouts would be in the marsh area and be about 80x300 feet in size with a nesting island in the center of each. Spoils would be leveled and seeded to retard erosion and provide suitable nesting habitat.

Comment period ends August 4 and written comments may be sent to the Red Lake Watershed District, 309 LaBree Avenue North, Thief River Falls, MN 56701.

Class A Baseball Pairings Are Made

Karlstad, Warroad, Roseau and Hallock will compete Sunday and Monday in the Class A Ninth District Sub-District 4 American Legion baseball tournament at Warroad.

Thief River Falls, Crookston and East Grand Forks joined Karlstad, Warroad, Roseau and Hallock to form the regular season Northwest League, whose standings determine the post-season Sub-District 4 pairings, but under this year's new Class AA-Class A arrangement in the Ninth District, they won't be involved in the playoff action this weekend.

Karlstad and Warroad will be the top two seeded teams in the single-elimination tournament that will qualify two teams for the Class A Ninth District tournament July 28-31 at Battle Lake. Roseau, winner of one game this summer, and winless Hallock meet Friday in a final regular season encounter to determine the No. 3-4 positions in this week's tournament.

Sunday's pairings match Karlstad against the No. 4 finisher at 3:30 p.m. and Warroad vs. the No. 3 finisher at 6 p.m. The winners will meet in Monday's 6:30 p.m. championship game. Karlstad beat Warroad 10-1 Tuesday to lock up the No. 1 seed.

Playoff format has yet to be announced for the six-team, double-elimination Class AA Ninth District tournament July 28-31 at Moorhead. Moorhead, Thief River Falls, Detroit Lakes, Crookston, Fergus Falls and East Grand Forks will be involved.

cellophane-like sac made of old skin, and stays there until cool rains fall — sometimes for more than a year.

+ Both the fennec fox and the elephant flap their huge ears to cool off. The bigger the ears, the more blood vessels there are lying close to the skin; heat from the warm blood flowing through these blood vessels then passes quickly from the animals body into the air.

+ Laughing gull pants like a dog and fluffs out its feathers to let its body heat escape.

+ Because the cougar hunts and eats in the cool of the night, he sleeps all day; the hotter it gets, the more his body stretches out, and the more he stretches, the more heat escapes from his body.

+ Ferruginous hawk protects its chicks by shading them in the nest with its own shadow while the other parent hunts for food.

+ Sand-diving lizard does just what its name implies: it dives into the sand and stays there.

Wildlife Art Show

Minnesota's wildlife management areas, administered by the Department of Natural Resources, will reap the benefits of a wildlife art show in Minneapolis.

Presented at Dayton's downtown store, the exhibit will feature nearly 1,000 paintings, sculptures and wood carvings by 65 Minnesota artists.

Starting July 30, the exhibit will be closed on Sunday, July 31, but will re-open August 1 and extend through August 3. It is a fund raiser for the Minnesota Wildlife Heritage Foundation, a non-profit organization which channels gifts of land, money or other valuables to the state wildlife management program.

Wildlife management areas preserve wetlands and other wildlife habitat for the enjoyment of hunters, trappers and others interested in the natural environment.

Site of the exhibit will be Dayton's eighth floor auditorium. The show is open to the public and free during regular store hours: Saturday and Tuesday, 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Monday from 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m.; and Wednesday from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

In conjunction with the show, the Heritage Foundation publishes a full color book "Wildlife Art" featuring the latest work of the exhibiting artists. Copies can be purchased at the show or afterward by mail order.

First Minnesota wildlife art show was held in 1977. The exhibit attracts approximately 25,000 persons annually, according to the Heritage Foundation.

Additional information on the exhibit can be obtained by contacting the Heritage Foundation, 5701 Normandale Rd., No. 308, Minneapolis, MN 55424.

Falcon Chicks Arrive

Ten peregrine falcon chicks arrived in St. Paul June 29 after a flight from Saskatchewan, Canada.

Ten chicks represent the largest effort ever made to reintroduce this endangered species to Minnesota. Last year, five peregrine chicks were released in Minnesota.

Reintroduction project is a cooperative effort by the Minnesota Chapter of The Nature Conservancy, the University of Minnesota's Bell Museum of Natural History and Raptor research and rehabilitation program, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Department of Natural Resources' nongame wildlife program.

Falcon chicks were raised in captivity at a special rearing facility at the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon.

Upon arriving in Minnesota, the birds were taken to a site south of Lake City. This site is in close proximity to cliffs along the Mississippi river where peregrine falcons nested prior to the time they died out due to DDT poisoning.

Here, the birds will be prepared for release at two nesting towers which were erected for them by Northern States Power Company.

Four more years of peregrine falcon releases are planned in southeastern Minnesota to help re-establish the peregrine as a nesting species in the state. Currently no peregrine falcons nest in Minnesota.

Peregrine falcon is renowned for its remarkable flight capabilities. It can fly at speeds up to 200 miles per hour.

Current project is partially funded by donations to the nongame wildlife checkoff on Minnesota's income and property tax returns. This year $10,000 of checkoff donations will be used to reintroduce peregrine falcons to Minnesota.

Improve Pheasant Habitat

Sharing the cost of developing habitat for pheasants on private lands will receive the largest part of the $500,000 appropriated to the Department of Natural Resources for fiscal year 1984 under the pheasant stamp act passed by the recent legislature.

DNR Wildlife Chief Roger Holmes said $452,000 will be spent during the year for planting winter cover, food plots and improving nesting cover.

Funds to finance the new program will come from revenue received through sales of the pheasant habitat stamp. The stamp costs $5 and starting with this year's pheasant season will be required of all pheasant hunters between the ages of 18 and 65.

Commissioner of natural resources is directed to expend 90 per cent of the stamp proceeds on pheasant habitat efforts, focusing on public and private land development projects. No more than 10 per cent may be used for full-time personnel and other administrative costs.

Before the pheasant stamp bill was introduced in the legislature, DNR wildlife specialists at the request of two sportsmens organizations — Pheasants Forever and The Minnesota Association of Farmers, Landowners and Sportsmen — prepared a plan identifying six priorities needed to improve pheasant habitat:

1. — Informing the public of pheasant habitat needs;

2 — Improvement of roadside nesting cover;

3 — Incorporating pheasant habitat requirements in future national agriculture programs;

4 — Expansion of the DNR wildlife habitat improvement program (WHIP) which provides private landowners cost sharing assistance on habitat projects;

5. — Insuring adequate supplies of high survival shelterbelt nursery stock for woody cover plantings;

6 — Expand wildlife and land use inventories in order to make adjustments in the pheasant habitat program.

Holmes said $74,000 is allocated to purchase equipment for an active roadside seeding program starting in the spring of 1985. A full time "roadside habitat coordinator" (approved in the pheasant stamp act) will be employed by the DNR in January or February.

This summer, the DNR's farmland wildlife research group will inventory roadside nesting cover data and determine the effectiveness of U.S. Department of Agriculture diverted acres and payment-in-kind (PIK) programs (priority 6).

Holmes said needed changes in present agricultural programs (priority 3) will be considered by the Congress this year when a new agricultural and consumer protection act is slated for hearings.

He noted that the PIK program removed five million acres from production in Minnesota this year.

"Improved nesting cover on these acres would have had very measurable benefits for ground nesting wildlife, like the pheasant," said Holmes. "The pheasant habitat stamp program provides $20,000 toward efforts to insure that wildlife habitat needs are made a part of U.S. agricultural programs."

He added that personnel and other administration costs comprise only 9.6 per cent of the $500,000 appropriated by the legislature for the first year of the pheasant habitat stamp program.

Wild Burros

Minnesotans who would like to own a wild burro will have a chance to purchase up to four of the animals when the U.S. Bureau of Land Management sets up a temporary "wild burro adoption center" in Wisconsin, July 28-31.

For the second year in a row, the BLM will truck the animals to Billy Nelson's Blue Ribbon Ranch near Elk Mound, not far from Eau Claire of Chippewa Falls and 70 miles east of St. Paul.

Adoption fee is $140 for each burro and purchasers must promise to give them good homes.

Additional information is available from the BLM, 350 South Pickett Street, Alexandria, Virginia, 22304; phone (703) 235-2840.

The first use of public works projects by the federal government to fight unemployment was by the Hoover administration in 1929, according to "Labor Firsts in America," a publication of the U.S. Department of Labor.

Black Ducks To Receive Added Protection Under Waterfowl Laws

New restrictions on the black duck are among the supplemental proposals published in the June 17, 1983, Federal Register by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for the 1983-1984 migratory bird hunting season.

This is the second in a series of proposed, supplemental, and final regulatory actions that set the season dates, hours, and daily bag and possession limits for the 1983-1984 hunting season.

With the exception of more specific proposals to further restrict black duck hunting in the Atlantic and Mississippi Flyways, few changes are being proposed to the initial frameworks published in the April 5, 1983, Federal Register.

Proposed black duck hunting restrictions for the Mississippi Flyway would raise the point value of the bird to 100 in every state where a point system is used (in most states the point value is now 70), and in states not using the point system the daily bag limit would be reduced to one. It is estimated that 11 per cent of the harvest of black ducks in this flyway in recent years occurred as the second black duck in bags containing two black ducks.

Public comment on black duck and other "late season" (opening on or about October 1) regulations proposals will be accepted through August 19 and at a public hearing on August 2, at 9 a.m. in the Interior Department Auditorium in Washington, D.C. The comment period on the early season frameworks (opening prior to October 1) closed on June 22; a public hearing was held that same day.

Black duck has been gradually declining in numbers for about 25 years. Service announced last fall that further restrictions on the harvests would be implemented in 1983. The June 17 proposals are based on recommendations from states in the Atlantic and Mississippi Flyways and are aimed at halting the downward trend in black duck numbers. In the Atlantic Flyway, where most of the U.S. harvest of black ducks occurs, the proposals are inteded to meet the guidelines of a 25 per cent reduction in state harvest recommended by the Flyway Council last year. Copies of the proposed regulations may be obtained by writing the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (MBMO), Department of the Interior, Washington, D.C.

Waterfowl hunters need to be familiar with the 1983 regulations on black ducks, because the restrictions vary not only from state to state, but in some cases, by zones within states. State wildlife agencies in both flyways are gearing up to explain the new restrictions in a major hunter information program about black ducks, in cooperation with the Fish and Wildlife Service and several sportsmen and conservation groups. The program is designed to inform duck hunters of the black duck situation in advance of the hunting season and to ask their help in reducing the harvest.

Fish and Wildlife Service is providing full-color leaflets and color posters about the black duck to the states and other cooperators for distribution to hunters.

Property Value Hearing Is Set

Pennington county board of equalization has continued its public hearing to 7 p.m. Thursday in the board room at the Pennington county courthouse, to hear public testimony regarding property valuations placed on the former Arctic Enterprises property, owned by Minstar Inc., and on the vacant Consumers Coop building.

At their July 13 meeting, the board voted to maintain those valuations at the same level as last year, denying a recommendation from the Thief River Falls city council to lower the Minstar valuation from $2,283,200 to $1,600,000; and to lower the Consumers Coop valuation from $103,600 to $88,900.

Although the Minstar valuation recommended by council would lower the taxes on the property to approximately $70,000, compared to approximately $105,000 due this year, company representatives reportedly were unwilling to accept any valuation which would require them to pay more than $25,000 in 1984, and suggested they would not pay taxes due this year if their request was not met.

Concern has been expressed by city and school officials over the results of those possible tax shortfalls, as well as effects which possible action by Minstar could have on Arctco Inc., which is leasing about one-third of the enclosed portion of the property from Minstar. That lease expires in December.

Since owners of the affected properties were not present at the July 13 meeting, the continuation was arranged to allow testimony to be given by concerned parties, according to County Auditor Ken Olson.

Identify Grain, Equipment To Deter Theft

Farmers can guard against thefts of equipment and grain by joining Operation Identification, engraving machinery with their permanent identification number (PIN) and mixing PIN-marked confetti into grain. The PIN serves as a deterrent against theft, according to Minnesota crime watch, a program of the Minnesota department of public safety.

Operation Identification is a proven program to reduce thefts and is available free of charge from police or sheriff departments. Farmers joining the program receive a PIN and an engraving tool or stamping kit to mark the number on property. The PIN identifies the owner which helps trace and return stolen property.

"It's a good idea to engrave the PIN in two locations on each piece of equipment. One location is known to you and the police or sheriff and the other place is known only to you," said Charles Rix, crime watch coordinator. "Be sure to keep a private, written record of your PIN, the equipment marked and where the numbers were placed on the equipment.

Also available from the police, sheriff or an independent source is PIN-marked grain confetti which can be mixed with grain or other crops. Confetti pieces are approximately ½"x½" and are printed with the farmer's PIN.

"Farmers should notify grain elevator managers of their PIN and that they have mixed confetti into their crops. The manager can then notify authorities if anyone else tries to sell the crops," said Rix.

One inch square operation identification stickers are available from the police or sheriff and should be placed on engraved machinery and bins containing crops mixed with confetti. The sticker warns a would-be thief that property is marked and will be hard to sell.

Crime Watch recommends these additional steps to prevent farm loss due to theft:

—Store chemicals and seed in a locked building. Bags of chemicals and seed should be marked with your PIN.

—If heavy equipment must be left in the field unattended, lock one or both drive wheels to the frame with a chain and heavy duty padlock and remove the distributor cap, rotor and wire.

—Mark livestock with a brand, tatoo or other system to discourage rustlers.

—Secure storage bins, grain elevators and machinery sheds with strong padlocks.

Other theft-prevention tips are in "Rural Crime, Don't Be the Next Victim", a crime watch booklet available free from local police and sheriff departments.

MN Taxpayers Ass'n. Holds Annual Meet

Members of the Minnesota taxpayers association held their 57th annual meeting at the Old Log Theater in Excelsior. Purpose of the meeting was to elect officers and directors, and to discuss the state's current tax climate and fiscal status.

Meeting was highlighted by the prepared remarks of Art Roemer, commissioner of revenue, and Gus Donhowe, commissioner of finance, whose comments centered on the projected return of stability in the state budget. Commissioner Donhowe pointed to a possible $500 million in budget liquidity for the 1983-85 Biennium. That amount was arrived at by adding the appropriated surplus of $250 million, another $100 million which may surface through new projections during the ensuing budget period, and another approximately $150 million which is attainable from the suspension of indexing and the unallotment process.

While the return to fiscal stability was noted, Don Johnson, out-going president of the Minnesota taxpayers association, stressed the cost of that stability which he pinned at $1 billion increased taxes. . . "for individuals, the temporary 10 per cent income tax surtax was extended through June 30, 1985. The six per cent 'temporary' sales tax was made permanent. The gas tax deduction was lost. The medical and casualty loss deductions were decreased and the investment credit deduction was eliminated. For corporations, the deduction for taxes paid to other states was eliminated; the multi-state tax compact was adopted."

Don Johnson, of Owatonna Tool, turned the presidency reins of the Minnesota taxpayers association over to Eugene Mason, vice president of First Bank System. As President, Mason will oversee the administration and research of the association.

Also elected as officers at the annual meeting for the ensuing year were: Mark Sather, Hanska - vice president; Peter Corcoran, Edina - secretary; Edward Chapin, St. Paul - treasurer; Robert Dolan, Roseville - assistant secretary; and Peter Wandmacher, Lake Elmo - assistant treasurer.

Three new members of the board were elected — Clyde Allen, treasurer and vice-president of business affairs, Concordia college in Moorhead; Gordon Forbes, counsel, Minnesota railroads association, St. Paul; and Harold Lofgren, professor of economics, St. Cloud state university.

Minnesota taxpayers association is a non-profit, non-partisan statewide research organization, which is often referred to as the "watchdog" of govenment spending and taxation.

Test System Replaces Paper Food Stamps

U.S. department of agriculture has awarded a $2.2 million contract to a McLean, VA company to test a system in Reading, PA that eliminates paper food stamps.

Planning research corporation of McLean will use electronic technology to debit the amount of food stamp purchases in food stores.

"We're testing this system as a method to remove the opportunities for fraud presented by the paper coupon," assistant secretary of agriculture Mary C. Jarratt said. "Once the negotiable documents are removed from the program, the possibility for illegal trafficking, mail fraud and lost and stolen coupons is eliminated."

Demonstration project is scheduled to run for 18 months following a pre-test period, Jarratt said.

Under the system, each food stamp household will get a magnetic card that has the recipient's picture, account number and biographical information laminated on it, Jarratt said. The household will also get a personal identification number that must be used with the card at the grocery store to verify use of the card.

At the grocery checkout station, checkers will insert the food stamp identification card into a computer terminal and recipients will enter their personal ID number into an accompanying keyboard to activate use of the card. If the card and the personal identification number match, recipients' account will be automatically debited by the amount of the food purchases and the grocers' accounts at a designated bank will be credited with the same amount.

Various issuance systems are presently used in the food stamp program, each resulting in the issuance of paper coupons, Jarratt said. Most food stamp coupons are distributed through the mail, either directly or through authorization to participate cards that are mailed to participants, Jarratt said.

Recipients present the authorization card along with a program issued identification card to a food stamp issuance agent and receive their coupons. These systems often result in mail fraud, theft, lost and stolen authorization cards and coupons.
